THANKSGIVING DAY this year comes Thursday, November 27.

Nothing bores a city so well as good streets, spacious and comfortable hotels, and commodious, well-built business houses.

With so excellent a fire department as there is here Phoenix should have much lower insurance rates than she now has.

One of the subjects needing the attention of the next Arizona Legislature is the establishing of a legal rate for all Territorial and county printing.

After a fair test, which it is bound to receive, the McKinley tariff bill will be found to be one of the most beneficial acts to the farmer and laboring man ever passed by Congress.

Better means should be provided in Arizona for the prompt transmission of election returns. It is now six days since the election and no one knows yet just how the next Legislature will stand.

Professor Koch's plan of curing consumption by inoculation becomes general, sufferers from pulmonary diseases will no longer need to seek Arizona's balmy climate, but may be cured at home.

The Mohave Miner has entered upon the ninth year of its publication. The Miner is a faithful exponent of the capabilities of its section and an excellent weekly digest of the news of North-western Arizona. The journal more than deserves the warm support it is evidently receiving.

Let a mormon break away from the political instructions of the priesthood and he is immediately declared an apostate, and yet the officials of this relic of barbarism will stand up and declare it a religious organization and takes no part in politics. Mormonism must be stamped out.

According to the census returns, during the last ten years the production of steel in the United States has advanced from 1,135,711 to 4,466,926 tons. This is one of the stubborn facts which the free traders cannot break down, so they carefully ignore it. Under the McKinley bill we may expect to see a parallel development of the tin-plate industry during the next ten years.

SALT LAKE MORMONS are having a headstone made for Dayton, one of the Mountain Meadow Danites, who was afterward picked off on horseback by a United States deputy marshal. One of the inscriptions after relating what a remarkable saint Dayton was says he was "lonely murdered by a United States deputy marshal," and a lot more of such rot. This is Mormonism for you, pure and simple. A man who participated in the blackest massacre that stains the pages of American history set up by this crime-loving and law-defying institution as a saint whom its followers must honor. Is it not time for the thinking men of this Territory to stop and consider the advisability of slowing the ballot to remain in the hands of such criminals?

THE REPUBLICAN wishes to publicly acknowledge the receipt of the many letters which have been coming to it the past two weeks from all parts of the Territory commending its spirited and aggressive campaign work. It is indeed gratifying to know that the active, working Republicans of the Territory appreciate our efforts. As stated in its first issue THE REPUBLICAN will at all times labor for the advancement of the Territory and for the good of the Republican party, believing that the interests of the Territory can best be subserved through the Republican party. Demagogism and political corruption such as recently exposed by us, we utterly despise, and at all times will apply the knife whenever we find such cancers on the body politic.

One of our Territorial exchanges should study the Congressional Record and the politics of the respective States. In a recent article on the United States Senate it said: "The Republicans now have a majority of sixteen in the Senate and have a fighting chance on Arkansas, North Carolina and Florida, with Payne's seat in Ohio very much in their favor." The Senate now stands 47 Republicans and 37 Democrats. The two new States of Idaho and Wyoming will add four to the Republican side. Arkansas went Democratic at its last State election in September by 30,000 and the Legislature is almost solidly Democratic. Calvin S. Brice was elected Payne's successor by the Ohio Legislature last January, and surely no sane man could see any prospects for Republican Senators from North Carolina and Florida. Must be that the galley boy was trying his hand at a political leader or else the editor-in-chief was buck at the desk again.

EDUCATIONAL CONCENTRATION.

Men who have been remarkably successful in public affairs have usually been gifted with uncommon mental powers, and by zealous effort have focalized their energies upon the work specially committed to their care. With associations of individuals, united for a particular purpose, the same principle prevails. In all the large cities and towns of America the common schools are harmoniously managed by boards of education, generally assisted by a superintendent. In some of the cities there is still another class of educators known as supervisors of schools. In the exceptional cases where one or more of the educational officials hold eccentric views, or prove unfaithful to their trusts, the other members of the board can generally prevent any hasty or imprudent action. These boards work together with the teachers with very little friction, like the complex mechanism of nicely-adjusted machinery. Hence the public schools of this country have been acknowledged as patterns of excellence by the best instructors in other lands.

Unfortunately a similar degree of superiority is not always attainable in the higher institutions of learning. In most of the Western States there has been a tendency to multiply colleges without maintaining a proper standard of scholarship. In this enlightened century, so varied are the departments of liberal education that very large sums are required for the support of a large corps of professors, and the establishment of laboratories, museums, observatories and other necessary appliances for the thorough mastery of modern science. Only a few American colleges have libraries sufficiently large to supply the need of students in all branches of learning.

Each of the leading religious denominations is desirous of supporting a college under its own direction in every prosperous and growing section of the United States. Yet very little distinctively sectarian instruction is imparted outside of theological seminaries. If strictly denominational colleges must be continued, leading to the several degrees in arts and sciences, money would be saved and the quality of instruction might be improved by reducing the number of institutions, enlarging the facilities of those retained and defraying the traveling expenses of indigent students.

There are two sides to every important question and a number of small colleges have sustained an excellent record for many years, and in such cases it will often be found that the faculty includes some professors of remarkable talent, superior training in some specialty or surpassing energy and zeal. An institution of this character will preserve its vitality under any circumstances, exemplifying "the survival of the fittest." Another valid argument for small colleges is the large proportion of instruction given to each student.

If it is considered expedient to retain all the colleges now in existence, perhaps their efficiency might be increased by placing several of them under a common system of regulations and appointing an examining board of experienced educators in a large measure independent of the local instructors. At Oxford and Cambridge, in England, there are numerous colleges and halls, each of which receives students and instructs them in the studies required of undergraduates. But the examinations for degrees are conducted by the universities alone, in such a manner that college favoritism is impossible. Lectures on special topics are given under the auspices of the universities and students in special departments have access to the immense field of research provided at those ancient seats of learning.

But it may be truly said that the education adapted to American students is sui generis, and cannot be conducted according to European models. To a considerable extent this is unquestionably true. But possibly the experience of centuries in justly renowned educational centers may not be absolutely without value in our unfettered and progressive Western institutions. A servile imitation of antique customs and foreign methods is certainly not desirable, and only such restrictions as may be in accordance with true liberality and genuine advancement should be tolerated for a moment. If any changes are needed in our educational system, the safest course will be to "make haste slowly."

The Pope is starting an agitation in Europe tending toward the restoration of his temporal power. In the Austrian Court is the Catholic interest especially strong. King Humbert, of Italy, has a visit due from the Emperor of Austria, but will not accept its return except at Rome. A visit by Austria's Emperor to the King of Italy at Rome, would be an acknowledgment by him of the Eternal City as the capital of Italy. This point he proposes to avoid by a meeting at some other Italian city, but to this King Humbert will not assent. More than diplomatic coolness has therefore sprung up between the two nations and to adjusting the difficulty the efforts of the German Chancellor, Von Caprivi, on his Italian trip were mainly directed. The politics of Europe are in such an unstable state of equilibrium that the slightest cause may be sufficient to precipitate an almost general war. The war seems sure to come, sooner or later, but when it does come Germany desires to be allied with the more powerful States.

Says the Tombstone Epitaph: "The Republicans of Maricopa County did splendidly. They elected their Sheriff and two members of the Board of Supervisors. One portion of the result that is especially gratifying is that Hakes, who was nominated simply because he was a Mormon, is defeated. This may be taken as a sign of the times and is an indication that the Americans of at least one county in the Territory are getting their eyes open to the gravity of the situation." Yuma is preparing to welcome several railroads. It is to be hoped that the lines will have existence in fact as well as on paper.
