

CELESTIAL SCENERY.

WALTER WELLMAN GOES TO PARADISE VIA PULLMAN CAR.

He Visits Bill Nye and George Vanderbilt at Asheville—The Millionaire's Magnificent Mansion—No Dude Is Young Vanderbilt—A Glorious Indian Summer.

Correspondence of THE REPUBLICAN.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Nov. 24.—Until today I did not know that one could go to paradise via Pullman car. But here I am in a country which the celestial landscape artists might well imitate, even if they don't.

It is Indian summer here in the mountains of western North Carolina. The nights are so cool that one wears an overcoat out of doors, and within draws the big fireplace in which the ash logs are crackling right merrily. The days are deliciously warm, hazy, languid, yet not wearisome. Around the mountain tops is a thin bank of blue smoke. The air seems to be all ozone and the sunshine all nectar, and you can't drink in enough of either.

It is a time and a place in which to loaf and invite one's soul. You forget the cares of life, its habits and its weaknesses—all save the habit of eating. In Asheville your appetite—gross, material and ravenous—will remind you that though this is paradise it is only a paradise of the earth earthy.

Bill Nye, who was once a tenderfoot out in Wyoming, has been in the effort east long enough to have his eyesight cut and to know a good thing when he sees it, and Bill Nye lives in Asheville, where he is the town's most distinguished citizen. To look at him in his pictures one would think he could live without eating, but he doesn't, and he says that while Asheville is a paradise for the poetic man, and the man who loves to get near the great heart of nature, and the lazy man who wants lots of sunshine and lots to do—with colored servants to do it all—it is also a paradise for a man with an appreciative and industrious stomach. Bill Nye has all of these qualifications for residence in paradise, and so he has chosen Asheville for his home.

Mr. Nye lives like a prince in Asheville, as he can well afford to do upon an income of $25,000 a year, the said income being the funniest thing there is to Nye—in Bill Nye's humor. He has a fine house on the mountain side, beautiful grounds, a splendid carriage and pair, and so many colored servants that he doesn't have to pull his own boots off. Mr. Nye is the most popular citizen of Asheville. When times are dull in the fashionable hotels the community clubs together, gets up a banquet to Nye, and, after filling his capacious skin with the good things for which this mountain region is famous, sit and listen to one of Mr. Nye's speeches. Lucky Nye! To be feted in paradise and to have the floor as long as he wants it is felicity indeed.

There is another distinguished citizen of the United States who believes this is paradise. That is Mr. George Vanderbilt. Perhaps you have read or heard something of the home Mr. Vanderbilt is building for himself here. It is not exactly a summer cottage, nor yet a winter lodge. When it is finished and Mr. Vanderbilt has company, there will be no need of any one sleeping on the floor or going out to the barn to bunk.

Mr. Vanderbilt has more money than Mr. Nye, and therefore he is building a larger house than that occupied by the great humorist. Just how large the Vanderbilt house is to be I don't know, but I got lost in the cellar of it today, and probably should have been there yet if that gallant fellow, Colonel McKisick, hadn't rescued me.

The Vanderbilt house is as yet all cellar and foundations, and these have cost the snug sum of $450,000. How much will the house have cost when finished? The architect's estimates are about $1,000,000, but I'll wager something that the total runs to $5,000,000.

George Vanderbilt is a millionaire after my own heart. I have definitely determined not to be a millionaire, but if anything could tempt me to change my mind it would be a chance to emulate young Vanderbilt's example. This fortunate young man came to Asheville a few years ago hunting and fishing. He fell in love with the country, as every one does. Then he looked around, thought some deep thoughts and said to one of his friends:

"I have an idea. The greatest trouble with my life is that I have no aim, no purpose, nothing on which to concentrate my energies. In the safety deposit vaults in New York I have millions of dollars in bonds and securities. When I look at them they disgust me. They seem so useless, so unproductive, nothing but white and green paper. I can't play with them, work with them, nor do anything with them. They simply worry me, without giving me any pleasure in return. Now I am going to make those pieces of paper serve me some useful purpose."

"What are you going to do?" "I am going to create right here in Asheville the finest gentleman's seat in the world. It will take me ten years and I don't know how many million dollars to do it, but it shall be done."

The foregoing conversation actually occurred on the portico of the Battery Park hotel. From that day to this Mr. Vanderbilt has been one of the happiest of men. He has an aim in life—a purpose. The constructive instinct, the desire to build something, is strong in all of us. It is this faculty that George Vanderbilt is now giving play, and on a scale so magnificent as to almost challenge belief.

He began by purchasing, or rather having agents quietly purchase for him, some 18,000 acres of beautiful land. It is hill, forest, valley, farm, plateau, lying principally between the French Broad and the Swannanoa rivers. Along the former stream, famous the world over for the beauty of its scenery, he will have ten or twelve miles of fishing and boating upon his own estate. Much of the ground is high and slightly, commanding a view for thirty or forty miles in all directions. From the eminence on which the Vanderbilt palace is being erected one may see mountain peaks in four states—North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Tennessee.

Vanderbilt set about creating the finest estate in the world in systematic manner. He employed architects, gardeners, engineers, landscape artists and an army of workmen. His payroll alone is $8,000 a week. About once in six months his hired men, thinking of their employer's twenty million fortune, go on strike for higher wages. His manager cables for instructions, and the reply always is, "Give them what they ask." So, you see, Vanderbilt is generous as well as ambitious, as a young man who has almost a million dollars for every year of his earthly existence can afford to be.

Hundreds of acres are set out to young trees. In this climate all sorts of trees and shrubs, excepting the very tropical, will grow, and Vanderbilt intends adding to the beauty of the natural forests all varieties the world can afford. The greenhouses are to be as large as some of the World's fair buildings at Chicago. A herd of eighty fine Jerseys, already on the place, will increase to several hundreds before their owner is ready to come here to live.

From the town to the palace site one of the finest macadamized roads in the world, two miles long and embellished throughout with shrubs, vines and flower plots, has been constructed. For the transportation of building material a railroad of the same length was built, locomotives being used for all but the steepest inclines, where cables are employed. Vanderbilt's private brickyard gives employment to 100 men.

The crowning feature of the whole work is to be the palace. A palace indeed! It is a maxim that the house which looks large in its foundations is large sure enough. The foundations of this house appear to me to be as large as those of the foundations of the Capitol at Washington. Evidence of the princely manner in which young Vanderbilt does things is found in an enormous masonry work at one end of the foundations of the palace. Massive walls thirty feet high, looking for all the world like some ancient castle, inclose a section of the hill about 325 feet long and 150 feet wide. These were originally intended for the foundations of the house, but Mr. Vanderbilt didn't like this part of the plan and decided upon a new house. And what will he do with the inclosure thus made at an expense of probably $200,000? It is to be his tennis court!

The foundations of the house, even more massive than the walls inclosing the tennis court, are about 400 feet by 200 in extent. Above the foundations are to rise four great stories. From the character of the foundations one may imagine the bewildering beauty of the superstructure. It is to be a stone palace of 100 rooms. Mr. Vanderbilt planned it for ninety-nine rooms, but the architect has taken the liberty of adding another. The banquet hall, the ballroom, the library, are to be baronial.

Vanderbilt travels in Europe, picks up new ideas and comes back here and spends millions upon them. One of his notions is an arcade or gallery running about 500 feet from the house to an astronomical observatory, and down a marble cascade from observatory hill is to run a stream of mountain water. The stables are to cost half a million, and horses are to come from Russia, Arabia, France, England and Kentucky. Deer and elk are to roam in the estate, and all sorts of game are to be preserved in the forest, where foxes already abound.

When Vanderbilt gets through with this work he will have something on which America may well be proud. He is one of the most rational millionaires I know of. The only mistake he has made is in failing to marry, but he is young yet. A student he is; a solid young man who loves his own society and that of books. He comes here and camps out by himself in the wondrous "land of the sky" in the Blue Ridge and Alleghany range, hunts and fishes. No dude is young Vanderbilt, for he was seen bathing in the Swannanoa one morning when there was white frost upon the ground.

There is no fear of his money giving out in the prosecution of this great enterprise. As yet he is spending only his income upon it. Some of the more sordid members of the family say young George is a fool to spend his money in this way, but his mother, I learn on good authority, came down here, saw what he was doing, basked in the sunshine of the mountains, and said: "George, if your money isn't enough to finish this, call on me. You may have my fortune if necessary."

I do not think young Vanderbilt is a fool. He is building wiser than he knows. When I look ahead fifty or a hundred years, to a time when the Vanderbilt family has run to seed, and see this magic palace and this matchless estate used as a great university for colored young men and women, I feel like giving the millionaire my blessing.

I have talked so much of Nye and Vanderbilt and the palace that I have no space left in which to describe the beauties of "the land of the sky" and the interesting people who inhabit it. This favored region lies from 2,000 to 3,000 feet above the sea, has neither mosquitoes nor malaria—an atmosphere noted for its dryness and its health giving properties, its coolness in summer and its salubrity in winter. It has scenery far famed, mountain peaks the highest this side the Rockies and corn whisky and candied yams on which Bill Nye is actually growing fat.

Lucky Nye, lucky Vanderbilt—their tents are pitched in paradise.

WALTER WELLMAN.

Those Dreadful Freckles.

They seem to trouble nine girls out of every ten, and I am sure I do not know why. In the first place, the girl who has a freckle or two on her face announces to the world at large that she uses neither paint nor powder. Then, too, she tells that she has been living in that best of all things—the sunshine. But somehow the freckles trouble her; her sweetheart thinks they are rather pretty, but she does not agree with him, and she is always asking, "What will take away the freckles?" Well, my dear girl, if you got them a week ago, or a month ago, or some time during the summer, the juice of the lemon, with a teaspoonful of borax in it, dabbed on them will cause them to disappear—that is, if you apply this treatment regularly, not if you put it on tonight and forget it the three nights more to follow.

Sometimes, if they have only just come, a few drops of benzoin, put in the water until it gives it a milky look, used for a few days, will cause them to disappear. And, by the bye, a very nice woman wrote and told me that she could not get benzoin at any drug shop in town. Well, just let her tell the chemists themselves that they keep a very poor stock of goods when they have not that. Five or six drops of it in a basin of water will make it look like skim milk, and make it smell like the fir or cedar trees, while it will cool a sunburned face and give what doctors call "tone" to the skin. But, my dear girl, I do not want you to bother about the freckles. They are really not worth it. Instead, make up your mind that they are sun spots, put on your face to tell the world of the sunny disposition that you have, and of the glad spot that you make at home.

Coming to the Point.

"Papa, what is a conflagration?" "A great fire, my boy?" "And what name would you give to a small fire then?" "A small fire? I cannot think just now of any special word. You might call it an incipient fire or a fire of little moment."

"Well, papa, I have just noticed that your top coat was burning at the back, and I was wondering whether it was a conflagration or an incipient fire!" Flareup and explosion.—Sondagesisse.

Had to Wear Them.

A story is told of the actress Mlle. Marie Maguire and her pearls. One day, as she was about to appear on the scene, somebody made the remark that her pearls were really of an enormous size. "It is true," she replied; "the lady whom I represent on the stage no doubt wear smaller pearls in real life. But what can I do? I have no small pearls."—Argonaut.

Wasted Politeness.

"Why didn't you thank that young man who rose up and gave you his seat?" "He gave it to me because he thought I looked older than any other woman in the car. That's why I didn't thank him. And I don't thank him!"—Chicago Tribune.

A Natural Supposition.

Gentleman—How do you sell those chickens? Dealer—Eighteen cents a pound. Gentleman—Oh, I thought probably you sold them by the head.—Harper's Bazar.

Furnishing Goods.

"Nefn, mine fren, I make nix big so Hink. Got all dees was shunt mine self out I Hink. He megus with 'Wonder-maker' man, and he kug fits me like notings. Yaw, yaw, I like such dot!" The original Jacob Strauss, Sr., is "in a fix"—such as you may secure at Wanamaker & Brown's.
