THE OLD TIMERS.

A singer died recently at Ryde, Isle of Wight, 86 years of age, who had sung in the choir for seventy-nine years.

John Thomas of Racine, Wis., who is locally reputed to be 103 years of age, supports himself in his declining years by selling canes which he himself makes.

A servant girl on a farm near Cambria, in northern France, has lived seventy-two years with the same family. She is now 84 years of age and still does her work.

Nathan Olmstead is dead at Belmont, Wis., where he had been a justice of the peace for more than fifty years. He was 87 years old. His wife preceded him to the grave two weeks.

Andrew Wolfkiel of Selmsgrove, Pa., has been a railway conductor since 1854 and though he has been off the track or over the bank with his train thirty-six times, has never been hurt.

Stephen Warrington, a Delaware farmer, who is now 74 years of age, was never sick a day and has never taken a dose of medicine of any kind. He is erect and strong and can do as much work in a day as two ordinary men.

Mrs. Mahala Bentley of Bloomington, Ill., whose mother was with Daniel Boone at the siege of Bconesboro, and whose mother's sister was the first white child born in Kentucky, has just entered upon her second century of life and is unusually active.

The health of Stephen Warrington, a Nanticoke, Del., farmer, is remarkable. He is 74 years of age and since the day of his birth has never had a doctor prescribe for him. He has never taken a dose of medicine and has never been sick a day. Mr. Warrington is a powerful man, weighing about 200 pounds and being six feet four inches tall.

Dr. John Parker Maynard, the discoverer of colloidin, died recently at Dedham, Mass., where he had been a leading physician for many years. While a medical student he began his experiments which ended so triumphantly. His object was the application of colloidin to surgical operations and when its success was demonstrated in 1847 Dr. Maynard gave his secret to the medical profession. He died at the age of 81.

IN THE WAKE OF WAR.

Big Bethel and its Light on the Red Badge.

Big Bethel was not only the first battle of the civil war, but it was also the first taste of real fighting for most of the troops engaged in it. On the northern side these were almost exclusively volunteers, the First, Second, Third, Fifth and Seventh New York, and a battalion made up of Vermont and Massachusetts volunteers. Some, indeed, of the officers were regulars, who, if they had not faced an enemy's fire, had had the training of the professional soldier. But for the majority of the officers as well as of the rank and file of the 2,500 or more troops who marched out of Hampton and Newport News to meet the rebels at Little and Big Bethel on that 10th of June, 1861, actual hostilities were a new and horrid test of their patriotic fervor. The surgeon to one of the regiments—now a peaceful physician and optician, though he lives inland, to a war with Spain—lately gave the writer the following sketchy but realistic account of it:

"In the first place it was damned hot and as the march began to tell the men began to strip. Each man had his haversack with rations. These went first, then their coats, and so on, until by the time they got to the scene of action they looked anything but military. They were a pretty scraggy lot anyway. There were ditches along the road filled with silmy green water, and the ignorant fools would fling themselves down on their bellies in the dirt and drink of those fetid pools. Bah! think of it! Of course, the result was any number of cases of diarrhoea and dysentery, to say nothing of malaria and other fevers. We had no ambulance, so M. (his assistant surgeon) and I on the way out had to help ourselves to a horse and carriage belonging to a woman, who was preparing to escape with it. We picked out a farm house that was well sheltered by woods from the enemy's fire; hid our ambulance some way farther to the rear and laid out our instruments ready for work. The firing had got to be pretty lively by that time. We could hear the cannon balls crashing through the woods and the rifle balls singing, and presently our first case came to us—on his own legs. He had sunstroke, sunstroke in the woods! For at that time our regiment had not got out from under cover of the trees. We were not surprised at the incident, however; we all knew that — was a coward.

"Well, after that there was another pause, and I said to M., 'Let's go over and see what G. is doing.' G. was surgeon to Duryea's Zouaves, the Fifth New York, and he had located his hospital right in the line of the enemy's fire. As we walked across the fields to it they must have seen us, but they let us get there. It was one of those southern shanties, of wood with a brick chimney built on outside from the ground up. In the angles of this chimney we noticed as we approached it, a man, one of our men, crouching and just then along came a cannon ball through the house, through the chimney and through him. Inside the house we found G. about to operate on a poor devil who had been brought in with a shattered arm. G. was as white as a sheet at the prospect. He was pretty green, and probably had never operated before. The moment he saw me he looked relieved. 'Here, doctor,' he said, 'you finish this operation,' and he handed me the instruments. So M. and I set to work and did the job for him.

"Later on that day we strolled up through the woods toward the fighting. Both the rebels and our men fought most of that battle under cover. The rebels were well posted, with the Black river in front of them and their batteries masked by trees. We had only a miserable little howitzer to oppose to them. But Lieut. Grebie, a brave young West Pointer, was in command of it, and he had advanced it right out into the open, and with his little squad of men he was standing there, full in the face of the rebel batteries, and blazing away at them as fast as he could load. Just as we came in sight of him a ball hit him in the forehead and carried away the top of his head. Of course he dropped like a stone. Poor fellow! I emptied his pockets for him lest we should have to leave him on the field. Among other things was a revolver and a lot of cartridges, and when I turned over his effects to the quartermaster I kept two or three of the cartridges as a memento. Years after I happened to meet an army officer from a far western post, and in the course of our talk I told him this story.

"By jove!' he exclaimed. 'I wish you would give me those bullets. Grebie's son is serving now under me, and I should like to be able to take back to him such a memento of the father he never saw.' The lieutenant, it seems, had been married shortly before he was killed, and his son was born after his death. Of course I was very glad to send him such a relic of his father.

"Well, our lieutenant-colonel's sunstroke was not the only casualty of the kind that the day brought forth in our regiment. Our major was attacked with dysentery, and it wasn't the ditch water in his case, either, for he wasn't a water drinker. He fell to the rear and joined the lieutenant-colonel, and the two together found my ambulance and confiscated it in their turn, and drove back to Hampton, loading as they ran—with plunder from the houses along the way. Lace curtains, bric-a-brac, silver—whatever they could lay their hands on and get into my sick-cart. Ben Butler, who was in command of the forces about Fortress Monroe at the time, had just promulgated his 'contraband-of-war' decision, and zounds! if they didn't meet him face to face.

"Why, how's this, gentlemen?' he said. 'The battle over?' And while they were humming and hawing for an excuse, he lifted the cover that they had thrown over their booty. They were given the opportunity to resign that night, and the next day they left for home. As a matter of fact, everybody ran away from that battle, only most of us did it more decently. We ran back to camp, and the rebels took to Yorktown."

SUMMARY OF SERMONS.

Following is a summary of the principal sermons recently delivered in the United States and Canada by the leading clergymen, priests, prelates, religious teachers and professors of the Christian faith. In every instance the text has been carefully read and abbreviated.

Guiding Stars.—There are no grander words to bring into conjunction than these words—God, life, church. Let these three blaze in one and you have the guiding star for all generations.—Rev. W. T. Hutchins, Evangelist, Indiana Orchard, Mass.

Concerning Color.—Color is not necessarily a fact in nature; it is simply a state of consciousness—a notion of the mind caused by certain physical impressions on the eye. Were the eye differently constructed, as in some abnormal individuals, we would see different colors.—Rev. Henry Frank, Independent, New York City.

Golden Speech.—There is not a syllable in all the innumerable words that fall every hour from human lips that is without its moral weight and influence; not a look or a thought but is freighted with an effect in changing the mental and moral status of the race.—Rev. L. D. Case, Universalist, Rome, N. Y.

The Perfect Standard.—Jesus Christ is the perfect standard; the fullest embodiment of all that is true and good forever making its appeal to the human heart; the Divine Ideal, his divinely manifested and verified as the final Reality, Friend, Savior, God, the one eternal personality in whom we live and move and have our being.—Rev. J. H. Smythe, Unitarian, Boston, Mass.

The Glorious Man.—The most glorious man is the one who is most self-forgetful.—Rev. P. F. Sutphen, Presbyterian, Cleveland, Ohio.

Confidence.—It is in a sinless Judge who knew what was in man that we place our confidence.—Rev. Roland Ringwalt, Episcopalian, Stockton, Pa.

Peace.—The Bible is the peace bringing book. It not only brings comfort in sorrow; it brings peace in every position in life.—Rev. R. A. Torrey, Chicago.

Punishment.—God's punishment is not poison, but medicine. The pain man suffers is designed to make them better.—Rev. Richard E. Sykes, Universalist, Denver, Colo.

Aids to the Church.—Pleasant greetings and cordial hand clasps from the laity do more for a church than powerful sermons from the preacher.—Rev. Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

Christianity and Hope.—Christianity is a religion of hope. No man can despair of the human race who suns himself in the sublime optimism of Jesus Christ.—Rev. W. Haines, Baptist, Washington, N. J.

Regeneration.—Regeneration rights the faculties of man, and they move toward the right like the solid phalanx of an army.—Rev. J. W. Lewis, Methodist, Louisville, Ky.

Righteousness.—The man who regards righteous living as a matter of expediency is apt to grow weaker from time to time.—Dr. Charles H. Richards, Congregationalist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Retribution.—To all of the punishments which God inflicts upon sinners there is a heavenly afterward in which they are beneficial results will be seen.—Rev. Dr. Edwin C. Sweetser, Universalist, Philadelphia, Pa.
