Theories About Food

Also A Few Facts on the Same Subject.

We hear much nowadays about health foods and hygienic living, about vegetarianism and many other fads along the same line. Restaurants may be found in the large cities where no meat, pastry or coffee is served and the food rank in his glory, and arguments and theories galore advanced to prove that meat was never intended for human stomachs, and almost make us believe that our sturdy ancestors who lived four score years in robust health on roast beef, pork and mutton must have been grossly ignorant of the laws of health.

Our forefathers had other things to do than formulate theories about the food they ate. A warm welcome was extended to any kind from bacon to acorns.

A healthy appetite and common sense are excellent guides to follow in matters of diet, and a mixed diet of grains, fruits and meats is undoubtedly the best.

As compared with grains and vegetables, meat furnishes the most nutriment in a highly concentrated form and is digested and assimilated more quickly than vegetables and grains.

Dr. Julius Remmonon on this subject says: Nervous persons, people run down in health and of low vitality should eat meat and plenty of it. If the digestion is too feeble at first it may be easily corrected by the regular use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal. Two of these excellent tablets taken after dinner will digest several thousand grains of meat, eggs or other animal food in three hours, and no matter how weak the stomach may be, no trouble will be experienced if a regular practice is made of using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they supply the pepsin and diastase necessary to perfect digestion, and every form of indigestion will be overcome by their use.

That large class of people who come under the head of nervous dyspeptics should eat plenty of meat and insure its proper digestion by the daily use of a safe, harmless digestive medicine like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, composed of the natural digestive principles, pepsin, diastase, fruit acids and salts which actually perform the work of digestion. Cheap cathartic medicines masquerading under the name of dyspepsia cures are useless for indigestion, as they have absolutely no effect upon the actual digestion of food.

Dyspepsia in all its many forms is simply a failure of the stomach to digest food and the sensible way to solve the riddle and cure the dyspepsia is to make a daily use of meat time of a preparation like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which is endorsed by the medical profession and known to contain active digestive principles.

All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50c for full treatment.

CHICAGO ART INSTITUTE.

Visit and Observations by The Republican's Correspondent.

Chicago, June 4.—(Special correspondence of The Republican.)—It would require the space of many letters to give an adequate idea of the magnificent Art Institute of which Chicago is so proud. Located on Michigan boulevard, in the heart of the business portion of the city, thereby affording the working man a fair opportunity to become acquainted with the beautiful things of life, the institute stands a credit to Chicago. It is a massive, imposing structure, of the Greek school. A row of stately, symmetrical pillars ornament the front, and a pair of Bayreuth lions upon the tail of which I noticed two dauntless American-spirited children swinging guard the broad stairway. The entrance room is harmonious and impressive. The interior fittings are marble, with brass and bronze ornamentation, and the floor is inlaid mosaic of exquisite design. In the center of this room, placed where the eye must first fall upon it, stands the great statue "Columbia," the work of America, by an American sculptor. It is not often that a new city has so favorable a chance to establish an art institute as had Chicago. The casts and decorations, relics of the great world's fair, would alone make a fine exhibit. These tastefully grouped about in the institute, and, added to them the many rare bequests given by enterprising and public spirited citizens make no mean collection. One would require many days' study to appreciate its beauty and magnificence.

All the rooms on the main floor are given over to statuary and sculpture, and while there are many exquisite examples of statuary represented in the group, one does not linger long beside any but the Angelo's. These always charm. So expressive, so intense in their significance, so impressive in detail, so massive, full of power and majesty, we pause, and linger; lost in wonder, and full of reverence for the great man who wrought these magnificent works.

My visit was primarily to see the annual water color exhibit by American artists. These pictures were displayed in and entirely covered the walls of three rooms on the second floor. And a grand collection of American gems it was. I looked at row after row of dainty water colors, on all sorts of subjects, all well developed. Of course some were more attractive than others. A few appealed to me deeply, many merited more than a passing glance, but all interested me, for they indicated progress and appreciation along the higher planes of existence, and predicted a future for American art. They suggest a thrill and energy in the right direction, and give us the assurance that, with her great strides in business and commerce, our glorious nation is too looking out for the ideal.

Charles Warren Eaton has one room given entirely to his works. One stands deafened at this vast, rich collection and honors the industry of the artist. The pictures are principally landscapes—a few flower pieces, I believe, I noticed—and typify all seasons of the year, and all hours of the day. We saw some exquisite winter scenes where the blue and purple tones pervaded, and then we noticed some delicate moonlight views which were so subtle and elusive that they held one with an indescribable charm! These pictures were all uniformly framed in gilt with mats of the same, and the display was a credit to the artist and an honor to the institute.

It was our pleasure to look for the first time upon a real Turner. This was a landscape, with some figures in the foreground, and by Ruskin was said to be really two pictures in one, and to be appreciated it must be so viewed. The effect of both sunrise and sunset, the beginning and end of the day being brought out in it, both from the effect of light and shade, and of the disposition of the figures.

We also noticed "A Venetian Day," an original of F. Hopkinson Smith. This was a pretty, artistic and typical Italian scene.

Two other pictures in the water color exhibit especially claimed our attention. They were by William Sorrey Bucklin, one called "The Rivulet" and the other "Sunshine Through the Woods." These had the most beautiful color effect—so simple and completely artistic. The trees were silver trunked, with the most exquisitely delicate foliage, and we could fairly realize the cool, restful influence of the autumn atmosphere.

And yet one more I must mention, for it charmed me beyond expression. It was a wonderful picture, "A Foggy Morning," painted by J. F. Karhart. When I first approached this painting I failed to see how it merited the tag "Sold" which was stuck in the corner of the frame. But as I looked the fog cleared away, and I saw, first a plain roadway, distinct, and yet indistinct. Then became visible some gaunt trees, stripped of their leaves, and entertainingly stretching forth their bare arms through the dense foggy atmosphere. In another moment I discovered the figure of a man, in the background, walking in the roadway. He was wrapped in a great cloak, and in an indescribable manner added to the general damp, chilly effect which the picture portrayed. The longer I looked at this picture the plainer these objects became, and yet all the time they were enveloped in the misty fog which overcast the picture. It was certainly a difficult piece of work to do, and was a triumph for the artist.

In the Henry Field Memorial room hang some beautiful and impressive paintings. I noticed especially one of Carot's. It's soft silver gray tones were in striking contrast to the deep, heavy touches of the scene by Jules Dupre which hung just beside it.

In this room hangs a picture which has been greatly admired by Chicago people. In fact, it has been the rage for some time. It is by Breton, and is called "The Skylark." Breton affected

EVIDENCE.

"Life is growing more and more bitter," said the melancholy youth.

"I suppose you are right," answered the amiable friend. "I notice that nobody says 'you bet your sweet life' the way they used to when I was a boy."—Washington Star.

GOOD ADVICE.

The most miserable beings in the world are those suffering from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint. More than seventy-five per cent of the people in the United States are afflicted with these two diseases and their effects; such as Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, Habitual Costiveness, Palpitation of the Heart, Heartburn, Waterbrash, Gnawing and Burning Pains at the Pit of the Stomach, Yellow Skin, Cold Tongue and Disagreeable Taste in the Mouth, Coming up of Food after Eating, Low Spirits, etc. Go to your Druggist and get a bottle of August Flower for 75 cents. Two doses will relieve you. Try it. Get Green's Prize Almanac, Wakelin's Pharmacy and T. F. Hudson.

ARMS AND MEN.

Once upon a time there lived two kings, by name Ethelstane and Ethelward.

Now, both of these kings, simultaneously, as it chanced, dreamed of universal peace, and proposed with one voice the disarmament of nations.

Hereupon each of the kings, Ethelstane equally with Ethelward, fell to fomenting himself upon having been the first to conceive of this excellent project.

"It is my idea!" quoth Ethelstane.

"Pardon me, it is my idea!" protested Ethelward.

At first the kings were courteous, though insistent, but presently their blood warmed, neither being at all given to yielding, until they were finally quite beside themselves with anger.

"We shall see whose idea it is!" thundered Ethelstane, placing himself at the head of his army and marching boldly into the domains of Ethelward.

"We shall indeed see!" roared Ethelward, gathering his forces to meet the invader.

During ten long years the war proceeded, with varying fortunes, until both kingdoms were devastated and depopulated. At last Ethelward fell by the sword of his foe.

"It was my idea!" exclaimed Ethelstane, not forgetting to fall upon his knees and humbly to thank the God of Battles.

This story of Ethelstane and Ethelward makes it very plain indeed that there are some things which cannot be settled save by an appeal to arms.—Detroit Journal.

READ IT IN HIS NEWSPAPER.

George Schaub, a well known German citizen of Lebanon, Ohio, is a constant reader of the Dayton Volkezeitung. He knows that his paper aims to advertise only the best in its columns, and when he saw Chamberlain's Pain Balm advertised therein for lame back, he did not hesitate in buying a bottle of it for his wife, who for eight weeks had suffered the most terrible pains in her back and could get no relief. He says: "After using the Pain Balm for a few days my wife said to me 'I feel as though born anew,' and before using the entire contents of the bottle the unbearable pains had entirely vanished and she could again take up her household duties." He is very thankful and hopes that all suffering likewise will hear of her wonderful recovery. This valuable liniment is for sale by Elvey & Hulet.
