A JAPANESE REST CURE.

A lady by the name of Kawakita last autumn was threatened with a nervous collapse which necessitated a visit to the seaside, and being at Kamakura she was persuaded to enter upon the form of rest cure practiced under the direction of a priest of the famous Kenkoji temple.

"It was on October 3 last," says she, "that I made the acquaintance of Kwanchosama, the director of the retreat. He acceded very kindly to my request to join in the exercises, and after resting my many questions about my life and about the beliefs I had hitherto entertained as to gods and Buddhas gave me a subject for meditation.

"The subject was 'Honrai no Memomoka,' and I was told to think about it until I had discovered its meaning or thought I had done so. When I had solved the problem I was to come again to the director, who would either give me a second problem or send me back to think over it again.

"The problems thus given are not of a nature to be easily solved. I cannot tell you the meaning of the particular one propounded to me, because I am not allowed to divulge the secret; it will suffice to say that some people will think over one or these formulas for a year or more without coming to a satisfactory answer.

"It was very difficult for me, with my family cares and household duties, with servants, children and visitors coming to interrupt me, to devote my whole attention to the problem assigned me, but fortunately I have been able to avail myself of stated periods of quiet.

"Once a month from the beginning of October to the end of March there is a retreat (seishin) held at the Kenkoji to which all students of the contemplative life are allowed to go. The retreat lasts for a week and during that time the male members live entirely at the temple, the women in private houses or their own homes.

"Hours of silent contemplation are observed, beginning at 7 o'clock in the morning and spread over the day till the evening. In the evening—five hours of silence in all, with the director sitting in the next room to receive communications and to furnish us with fresh problems when necessary.

"I had to leave the house early in the morning with a chochin (lantern) to light me; it was 10 o'clock in the evening before I returned. Our meals during the day were supplied from the temple; for breakfast tea, rice gruel and relish; at midday rice, kenchin soup and vegetables boiled in soy; in the evening tea and rice gruel.

"The most important of these meetings was the one in January. During the course of it I had the good fortune to solve my first problem. The second problem given me was 'Kane no wo tomeru, how to stop a bell from sounding.'

"The rest cure is now over. I have come out of it fortified in body and in mind. I am no longer nervous and irritable; I am able to look at things more dispassionately and feel myself more fit than I was before to cope with the difficulties and worries of life."—Japan Magazine.

ALL BECAUSE OF POOR TUGS.

Why a North Missouri Town Missed a Good Thing Twenty-Five Years Ago.

"Did I ever tell you how it happened that part of northern Missouri was passed up by a big baking powder concern twenty-five years ago?" asked the old traveler, when it came his time to tell an experience.

"Of course I didn't and maybe I can't tell it as well as could John M. Road, who has just returned from his settlement down to be sheriff of Kansas City and a few miles around, in the old days

John was route man for a big concern. It was his business to go out into new territory and size it up. If it looked good he set a crew to work to introduce his goods.

"This was John's system: Everytime he got off the train he hiked right to the public square. He always found teams hitched to the racks. A look or two satisfied him as to whether he wanted to stay. How? He simply looked at the tugs of the harness. If they use chains or ropes, I move on," was his motto; "if the tugs are sound leather, that's the place for me."

"On this trip I'm telling about John made all the coal mine towns and what he found in the line of harness was remarkable. The result was that he passed up that whole section of the state. He went there the other day, however, and from force of habit, looked at the tugs again. And when he came back he said:

"Boys, I surely could have sold a lot of goods in that section if they had had harness like that twenty-five years ago."—Dry Goods News.

TREATMENT FOR VULBILITY.

Abernethy was supposed to influence people by a brusqueness amounting to absolute rudeness. It is related that one day a very notable lady took her daughter, who was very ill, to see him.

"Which of you wants to consult me?" said Abernethy.

"My daughter," replied the elder woman.

Abernethy then put a question to the girl. Before she had a chance to reply her mother began a long story. Abernethy told her to be quiet and repeated his question to the girl. A second time the woman began a story, and a second time he told her to be quiet. Then she interrupted him a third time.

"Put your tongue out," he said to the mother.

"But there's nothing the matter with me," she exclaimed.

"Never mind; put your tongue out," he commanded.

"Thoroughly overawed," the woman obeyed.

"Now keep it out," said Abernethy, and he proceeded to examine the girl. —Ladies Home Journal.
