SHERIDAN WILL GET A CHANCE TO MAKE GOOD

Senate Committee is Arranging for Speed Tests to Determine the Competency of the Accused Stenographer

BLUMENBERG HAS LOST POSITION

Also, He May Be Punished Further if Senate Committee Can Find Precedent as Warrant for Such Action

[Associated Press Dispatch] WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—Discharged as official stenographer from the senate Lorimer investigating committee and awaiting possible further punishment for contempt, Milton W. Blumenberg took the witness stand today before the committee to tell why he branded as "manufactured" the stenographic report of J. E. Sheridan of the alleged photographic admissions of Charles McGowan. He repeated under oath the statements made Saturday that the notes were "faked." The tense situation into which the investigation was unexpectedly shunted in sharp passages between counsel and members of the committee.

Blumenberg told how he had "examined" Sheridan's testimony as to his "qualifications" and how he had watched over his shoulder as he read the notes of the witness on the stand. Then followed a storm of questions by members of the committee regarding Blumenberg's talks with Edward Hines. He said he couldn't remember whether Hines was in the group near the door after the Saturday session when he presented the notes "absolutely manufactured." He said he hadn't the "remotest idea" what he said to Hines just before his statement to the committee. Blumenberg then gave technical reasons for his opinion on the notes. The committee summoned a number of stenographers to testify. It is considering a number of tests to determine the issue. Blumenberg's examination will be continued tomorrow.

This may prevent his making speeches in states which hold an early primary and friends in those states will make such a campaign as in their judgment will serve best the progressive principles which his candidacy represents. ## HOUSE TURNED DOWN SLAYDEN RESOLUTION

Democrats Backed Out at Last Moment on the Mooted No Third Term Proposition

[Associated Press Dispatch] WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—The house today avoided going on record on the presidential third term proposition. Just at the moment when the Slayden resolution, aimed principally at Col. Roosevelt, seemed about to pass, a shrewd parliamentary move displayed the measure for consideration. It may be revived later, but its position on the calendar is lost. The resolution states that "it is the opinion of the house that the example of Washington in retiring after two terms has become a time-honored custom, and its violation would be fraught with peril to free institutions. It required a suspension of the rules to pass, and a "second" to it had been recorded. Sims, of Tennessee, objected to the "second" and Slayden asked the yeas and nays. The republicans refused to vote, thus throwing the democratic members in the position of passing the measure by a party vote, and in the opinion of some republicans, of indicating a fear of the colonel's popularity. On the vote, however, the motion lost, 96 to 51, and Slayden withdrew his request for a suspension of the rules.

Brandeis, of Boston, in a speech before the Knute and Fork club tonight declared capital could expect little better from opposed workmen than the Los Angeles dynamite outrage and violence in the Lawrence, Mass., textile strike. Brandeis ended his address with a warning that unless the industrial condition of the country was remedied there would be a clash between labor and capital that would result in bloodshed. E. J. Heney, of San Francisco, spoke on the recall of judges. He declared the function of the judge largely legislative and if it was right to recall legislators there could be no possible objection to recalling a judge. Heney said the people would not abuse the judicial recall. He declared after a thorough investigation of the subject eliminating graft in cities, he believed the only solution to be municipal ownership of public utilities.

VISITOR SAYS HE IS PLEASED WITH ARIZONA

Parker Expresses Strong Belief in the Possibility of State's Development

WILL SOON LEAVE FOR OLD COUNTRY

Compares This Region With the Farming Country in Some Parts of Australia

Sir Gilbert Parker the well known British statesman and author who has tarried for a little more than a week in this valley, will leave this morning for Prescott and after a brief stay there will hurry to the homeland to take up his duties in parliament. His encomiums of this southwestern land are extremely laudatory and as sincere as they are emphatic. He is not only enraptured with the climate which he declares is incomparable but he is most complimentary to the personality of the Arizona people. Seen at the Hotel Adams last evening, Sir Gilbert expressed the wish to come again for a longer stay and said his return next winter is as certain as any plan so far ahead can be. Whether he comes earlier in the season, or later, will depend upon political events in England which may shape his duties for him.

Speaking of southern Arizona and those parts of the state he has had no time to visit, Sir Gilbert said: "It is a regret that I cannot visit Tucson. I did not wish to rush down there and spend a day and rush back again. That is a tourist's way of doing things and I am not a tourist. I did not wish to pay so poor a compliment to Tucson, as to attempt to exhaust its interest in a flying visit. When I come again I am going by the Southern Pacific to Tucson and shall there pitch my camp first."

Asked to say something concerning his impressions of Arizona he spoke of the chief features that had appealed to his interest in the following words: "I have done what I wanted to do in coming to Arizona. I have gone far to re-establish my health and to get rid of the malaria which has pursued me at intervals over the last twenty-five years, in fact since I was a boy. I had the choice of going to Sudan or coming to Arizona. Arizona was my own individual choice. People in England and even people in New York said, 'why Arizona?' Well, when I was a boy on my way to get malaria in the south sea I had sniffed the air of Arizona as I passed through enroute to Los Angeles and ever since that time my mind had reverted to that wonderful day in 1886 when I passed through the northern part of this territory. I had a conviction that if I could again breathe the air of Arizona that I should do two things: Start upon a new career of health and renew the inspiration of my youth. You see we politicians in the old land are more reformers than builders. You here in the new world are more builders than reformers. Every day you see the fruits of your labors. Every house you build and every field you open up to cultivation is part of the construction of a nation. You make laws with the paper clean for the drawings. We are only altering old laws and accretions of interests of various kinds which are disturbed as soon as we begin to make fresh laws.

"Well, I go back to England much younger in health and much younger in spirit. Arizona has done more for my health in these seven weeks that I have been here than all the doctors and all the watering places of the world. Egypt and the Sudan did me good but Arizona has done me better. I think you have got the most wonderful climate in the world. The dryness of the air night and day, the bracing quality, the purity, the sun, all repeat it whenever I get the chance.

"I have found health and inspiration here and I have found wealth. I have found a wealth of good companionship. Nowhere in the world have I ever run up against a people so great hearted, so generous, as my Arizona friends—for I will call them that. There are only two places where anything like the same hospitality and frank and tactful generosity may be found in anything like the same degree. Those two places are up-country in Australia and the western provinces of Canada, but Arizona in my experience, has no rival and I leave this state with greater regret than I have ever left a country where I came as a stranger to learn only that I was at home.

"I believe in the future of Arizona. I believe that it will be one of the most prosperous states of the union. Naturally large portions of its territory will not be available either for industry or for agriculture, but you have enough territory left to yield you, and mining and an agricultural production which will in the ultimate sum make you the successful companion of many northern, eastern and southern states. I remember when I passed through Arizona in 1886 that it was regarded as
