BURGLARS LOOTING HOMES OF TEMPEANS

TEMPE, Jan. 8.—Tempe evidently was harboring thieves Saturday. The home of Miss Hault on Normal avenue was looted and the home of Miss Wright broken into Sunday night. The Grand pool bet was entered through the rear screen and window, and although the cash drawer was left open the offenders found nothing. Saturday Miss Hault went over to Phoenix to spend Sunday with her people and Miss Roberts spent the night with friends. Some time during the night robbers entered the house and ransacked the place. The house was found with everything rifled, and silk stockings, handkerchiefs, jewelry, silverware and everything which could be easily taken, gone.

Miss Wright and friend, Miss Hunt, who live together, spent Saturday evening with friends and upon returning about 10:30 o'clock they found the house had been entered. A purse belonging to Miss Wright was taken containing quite a sum of money which she had drawn that morning to pay a bill. Pins and other jewelry belonging to the two had also been taken.

BATHING FIRST WAS THOUGHT A LUXURY

(Chicago Journal)
Bathing in most of its modern forms is as old as the beginning of the world. While the baths of the Greeks were distinguished by a rigid simplicity, the Persians exercised their ingenuity and taste in luxurious adornment of these places. Alexander the Great sought into verbal rhapsodies over the beautiful decorations of the baths used by the conquered and fugitive Darius.

But to the fine example of the Romans, during the days of the Caesars, is due the style of bathing indigenous to the life of these. In the beginning the Romans, after exercise, simply plunged into the Tiber, but with the construction of an aqueduct that carried water from the river into the city were introduced the small public baths, originated by Claudius Meeenas built several fine public baths at his own expense, and from his time each ruler made effort to improve upon the examples of his predecessors in the construction of Greece's buildings, not merely bathing rooms, but gymnasiums, reading halls and libraries; Agrippa, Nero, Titus, Domitian, Dionysius Commodus and Diocletian outdoing each other in this always potent bid for popular favor.

The Roman baths, according to Tacitus and Suetonius, contained swimming pools, vapor rooms and hot air rooms constructed very much on the line of the Turkish and Russian baths of today, the parallel being completed by the employment of servants, whose duty it was to anoint bathers with a pulpy soapy substance, or with oils and pomades.

The swimming and hot air baths of Rome and other Italian cities gradually falling into disuse were maintained in full force in Egypt and Turkey, the custom gradually spreading to France, Germany and England. To the famous Russell, England owes the revival about the middle of the eighteenth century of sea bathing, which, from the time of the Saxons had fallen into disuse, and from this custom dates the wholesome love of the English for cold water bathing.

DEARTH OF WHITE MICE IS ALARMING
(New York Evening Post)
The European war has cut off the supply of white mice. They are needed to make tests of pneumonia germs prior to the administration of the pneumonia serum now being supplied by the department of health. Unless a new supply of mice is furnished, the department will be forced to discontinue this work.

The federal government also has taken up a large part of the available supply of white mice, utilizing the animals in tests to determine the purity of impurities in the air of submarines.

WIVES WANT TO BE NEAR THEIR SOLDIER HUSBANDS

(Special to The Republican)
SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 7.—Wives who want to be near their soldier husbands have become one of the biggest problems for the American Red Cross. It is no affair of the Red Cross workers if the wives have sufficient money to care for themselves, but scores of them are spending the entire family nest egg on railway tickets from one camp to another and have nothing left for living expenses.

"Our charge from peace to a war footing apparently has dazed hundreds of the women folk and their only thought is that as long as possible they must be near their soldier husbands before they go to France," said C. J. O'Connor, director of civilian relief for the Pacific division, American Red Cross, yesterday.

"Sensible women, distracted by the turn of affairs, have packed up and left home without a thought of finances."

"The Red Cross stands ready and willing to aid every family left in need by the departure of the bread earner for war service, but this aid will not be given properly if the wives do not consult their local chapter of the American Red Cross before departing for one of the cantonments. Each Red Cross chapter has set aside a certain amount out of the funds raised locally to be expended in caring for families of soldiers in their own districts, but if the wives assemble in great numbers near the camps, the burden becomes too heavy on the individual chapters in whose jurisdiction the camps are located, and many cases are sure to be overlooked."

One instance has been reported from San Diego, where a wife first moved to be near her husband at American Lake and when he was transferred to Camp Kearney at Linda Vista, she followed him. She had spent $62 for carfare and when found in San Diego was having one recent meal a day and her husband was compelled to walk 12 miles to be with her, because he did not have carfare. San Diego has reported 31 such cases that are being cared for by the San Diego chapter of the American Red Cross.

Where necessary, the Red Cross pays rent, buys food, clothing and fuel and tends to all necessities of the soldier's family, but the only way that this care can be asked is by getting in touch with the local chapter of the American Red Cross.

The Home service is expected to be one of the most important branches of the American Red Cross work in the months to come, and the increase in demands is shown by the records of the Pacific division for October, November and December. In October, an incomplete list shows 211 families were provided for. In November, there were 214 cases and the December total will be much greater than either of the former months. In California alone, $4,582.78 was expended by the American Red Cross for needy families of soldiers during the month of November.

The civilian relief work is closely co-ordinated with the military relief department of the Red Cross. Each camp has a red cross director in charge of the relief work and the comforts of the soldier that are not supplied by the army are attended to by this Red Cross representative. Many of their wives who leave their homes to be near the camps have explained their action by a desire to know that their husbands are well and given proper attention.

"Wives desiring to know the health and needs of their soldier husbands may have a complete report through the agency of the Red Cross," advised Civilian Relief Director O'Connor. "By addressing the Red Cross Military Relief in any camp, a report will be given any man on duty at that camp and his needs will be provided. It is the purpose of the Red Cross to act as an intermediary for those at home and a soldier in camp in the United States, or at the front."

WHEN THE FLAG HAD FIFTEEN STRIPES

(Milwaukee Free Press.)
Most persons, if asked when the United States flag had more than thirteen stripes, would answer promptly, "Never!" And if told that the Star Spangled Banner that flew over Fort Mifflin when Francis Scott Key wrote the national anthem had fifteen stripes they would scoff. For most of us have forgotten that after Vermont and Kentucky had been admitted as the fourteenth and fifteenth states, congress on May 1, 1792, enacted a law which fixed the form of the flag for all time as having thirteen horizontal red and white stripes and a blue union to which one star is added for every new state that is admitted.

The story of this almost forgotten change in the flag is told by Philip R. Dillon in "The United States Flag," just published by the American Penman. This fifteen-striped flag flew for twenty-three years, including the war of 1812, for it was not until March 4, 1818, that congress enacted the law which fixed the form of the flag for all time as having thirteen horizontal red and white stripes and a blue union to which one star is added for every new state that is admitted.

WIRE THEFT TIES UP TROLLEY LINE

(Republican A. P. Leased Wire)
OMAHA, Jan. 7.—Fort Crook was cut off from communication with Omaha for half a day today while repair men of the street railway replaced half a mile of trolley wire which thieves stole some time during the night.

The electric line between Omaha and the fort closes at midnight and the electric current is cut off from that portion of the street railway system. Between the time the current was cut off for the night and daylight, the thieves stole the heavy copper trolley wire. No cars could be operated to the fort until the line was replaced. The stolen wire is valued at several hundred dollars.

CELEBRATE COMING OF FIRST BISHOP

(Republican A. P. Leased Wire)
ST. LOUIS, Jan. 7.—Catholics here today celebrated the 100th anniversary of the coming to St. Louis of the first Catholic bishop, Louis Du Bourg, bishop of Louisiana, with a pontifical high mass this morning in the old cathedral and pontifical vesper services this afternoon in the new cathedral, both of which were presided over by Archbishop Glennon, assisted by six visiting prelates. Archbishop Harry of Omaha, was celebrant of high mass.

"We must even at the cost of much sacrifice bring back confidence, faith and love, otherwise the world will perish, poisoned from its own fangs, which were charged with deadly venom of hatred, ambition and greed," declared Archbishop Glennon in his sermon.
