BACHELORS NEVER IN SUCH DANGER AS THAT WHICH NEARS

Leap Year is only just around the corner. Never before have the hunted males been in as deadly danger as this season.

With the war over, the debutantes, debutantes of a year or two ago, and those dating back a bit farther are determined to try their wiles on the defenseless men whose attentions they have missed for the past two years.

The more deadly of the species will work with a calmness, for the grim seriousness of marriage is known to them. They have taken into consideration the high cost of living and the first choice will naturally revert to the most eligible bachelors.

While it is doubtful if a pretty Phoenix girl would marry mere money, still it is something in this day and age to know that one can meet the rent.

But pause a moment and pass rent by.

There is John Rinker Kibbey who is building a most remarkable bungalow at his country place north of town. It is really quite the choicest bit of ranch land in the valley, splendid view and all that, and "Rink" has had erected a most remarkably original and attractive home. He, of course, is the architect. With his years of study abroad, you can rely on it that the furnishings will be in perfect harmony. He's a bachelor, however, a bit difficult to approach. He's perfectly friendly, but his cleverness rather frightens youth who cannot quite keep up with his clever small talk. Since he is back from France, (he served as a captain over there) "Rink" has not gone about a great deal. It rather bothers him. Any Leap Year maid or divorcee who can really land him, it is said, will be given a medal by congress for accomplishing a difficult task.

While Charlie Pope hasn't a home, there are plenty willing to make one for him.

Although he is anything but a woman-hating bachelor, Charlie has been so very friendly with all the girls without signalling out any particular one, that he is another on the "difficult" list. He doesn't "hear it" or anything like that, but is merely nice and flattering and agreeable—and girls, he is the type of man who means nothing.

Do you suppose Edward Marshall is waiting for the "right little girl"?

Is that the reason he does not marry? Because we happen to know that Edward is in a position to tackle matrimony if he should so desire. Or do you suppose there are too many right little girls that he can't make up his mind. Anyway, he is socially inclined and we believe he would make a right nice husband.

Joe Casson has gotten to be such an old story as the best looking man in town that the girls have grown weary in long years of having Joe's beauty. He still whispers sweet nothing to debutantes and gets by with it, but he isn't the marrying kind, we fancy.

Speaking of Joe, recalls his business associate, Roy Murray, recently returned from France after long service overseas. Everybody likes Roy, and because he likes everybody, he will be a hard subject for even the experienced husband hunter. He's "young" in years, but that is all. He's a nice boy who has been made much of and hasn't been spoiled, but he simply will not land.

Take then the gentleman farmer—the man from the east—Dan Patch, and see how far you can get with him. You will not reach the office of the clerk of the superior court where they dispense marriage licenses, we wager. Dan Patch—nicknamed from the famous race horse—and not because of his speed, but because he's a thoroughbred.

They do say that Edward Rowe should not be in the list, but do not give the reason. He is not married and we know just loads of girls who are simply crazy about him, but he can't see them at all. Do you suppose there is only one?

John D. Harris should be included, as he declared only last evening that he was not engaged, although everybody thinks so. No names mentioned, please.

James Stafford is getting to be a regular lion, and when they are so awfully popular they are less inclined to settle down. Who wants an audience of one when many are available?

Harold Scott and Smith Pickens of the not long ago were "mere school boys" are regular fellows, don't you know? They go about everywhere and seeing the matrons so keen, the girls have been a bit shy about trying their wiles on them. But their Leap Year now and its your chance without being considered a bit bold or anything.

A secret just out is the news that Chester Goldberg is to come home for the holidays. Chet was only a boy when he left here last spring, but they do say California has rathered him. He's a crack athlete and an all-around good fellow and no one would say you were robbing the cradle, really.

Our present statement are just as brilliant as the old-timers. Why 66 years ago a Congress wouldn't have known how to spend a billion dollars.

We have the largest holiday stock of merchandise of any store in Arizona. We are of it. Besides, we own our stock at 25% less than any other store. That's why we selling our merchandise 25% cheaper than any other store in the city. And this is a lot less than we could sell it had we to go into the markets today and buy at rent prices.
