

PROHIBITS SALOONS AND GAMBLING

And Kindred Evils Out at Mountainair--Prospects For Lively Town.

OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST

Special Correspondence. Mountainair, N. M., Nov. 29.—Mountainair will prohibit saloons, gambling and kindred evils. This was decided at a stockholders' meeting of the Abo Land company Monday of this week.

It was decided at the meeting to replat the town site, making the two main streets 100 feet wide and each lot purchaser will be given a warranty deed and an abstract of title.

The new well on the right of way is down about 400 feet and when Engineer Dun was here the other day he spoke very favorably about going down 1500 or until oil or flowing water was found.

The two steam shovels at this place are throwing dirt about as fast as two steam shovels can and they expect to have the big cut here finished in about two months or possibly less.

Wm. M. McCoy will soon be living at home in his new house on his homestead adjoining the town site. W. F. Bartlett has the contract and when completed this will be about the neatest and best built house in Torrance county.

The family of J. J. Goforth arrived from Newkirk, Oklahoma, last week and until they can build a home of their own, they are living in the Col. Manning house.

Capt. and Mrs. J. A. Corbett arrived from Medford, Oklahoma, this week and are living temporarily in John W. Corbett's property until they can get a house built on their homestead.

With plenty of rain, the water holes all full, splendid grass, stock never in better condition, a "dry" town with which to appeal to the better class of citizens and the assurance of railroad sympathy and help, Mountainair people are feeling pretty good over the outlook for the future.

WANDERING LENA A FLYING DUTCHMAN

The Russian cruiser Lena seems to lack firmness of purpose and decision of character and to be in danger of superseding the Flying Dutchman in marine folklore as a result of these deficiencies, says the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle. During the pendency of the Russo-Japanese war, it will be remembered, she one day suddenly appeared in San Francisco harbor, in an "out of the everywhere into the here" fashion that caused considerable comment at the time.

It was learned that she had been poking aimlessly about the Pacific coast for some days before she happened upon the Golden Gate. But nobody, least of all her own officers, apparently, had the remotest idea how she came there or what she was trying to do—and nobody knows yet. The Lena was in the position of the dog in the story, that had "let his tag." The United States, as much in pity for the wanderer as in fulfillment of its international obligations, took charge of the Lena and was good to her till the end of the war. The bewildered vessel had a long rest, free from worry and care, and her officers had a good time, except a couple, who, not having sense enough to know when they were well off, broke their parole.

But the end of the war came and the Lena was forced to resume her weary wanderings. She started for Vladivostok, and that was the last heard of her for a long period—long enough for her to make the voyage to Vladivostok three over. The other day she appeared at Honolulu in the same sudden and mysterious fashion as at San Francisco—still in a daze, still in trouble, still a nautical Mrs. Grundy, "a poor, lone wanderer" with whom "everything goes contrary." Her officers have vague ideas as to where she has been since she left San Francisco. They babble of an indistinct impression that they arrived at Vladivostok, but were told to go away, and they did so. But they probably dreamed that.

The Lena, at present, has an idea that she needs to get her home is a little cool. The idea is probably delusive. After she has left Honolulu she is quite as likely to turn up at Charlotte as at any Russian port. At her present rate of progress it will take her about twenty years to get home, and when she arrives the Russian navy will, at last, have a few sailors used to the sea. But there is some reason to believe that the Lena will never get home, and, indeed, there is no such vessel in the Russian navy as the Lena. The real Lena was probably wrecked long ago on some unmarked island and the present apparition is merely her wanderlust ghosts—or Vanderdecken's accursed bark in disguise. What appears to be the Lena is probably just a "mystery of the sea," about which Rudyard Kipling ought to write a story.—Denver Republican.
