Our Greatest Fault

Albuquerque has fewer faults than most cities of her size, but she has one which sticks out prominently and which should not much longer be neglected.

Albuquerque doesn't advertise enough. A tourist, who passed through this city recently at night wrote to a friend here and this is how he described Albuquerque:

"A little town with a sprinkling of lights, sitting out in the sand in the darkness of night; a low roofed depot, hotel and a few railroad buildings with a number of Indians offering earthenware for sale on the platform."

It was enough to make the average citizen of Albuquerque take a gun and go back east on a carnage bent.

If there is one thing we have, its the finest depot, railroad hotel and railroad buildings in the southwest. The man who wrote the above must have been blind, drunk or locoed.

But too many eastern people have that idea. It can't be cured; there is no use in trying; such people are past help.

But still there is another class that does see us in our true light only they don't see enough of us.

The twenty minutes or the half hour that the big through trains spend at our station, is not long enough for the "casual visitor" to get a really fair impression of Albuquerque.

Out at Kingman, Arizona, where they haven't one-twentieth of the things to be proud of that we have, the enterprising citizens have adopted a method of advertising, which it would be well to adopt here.

They have built a monument of all the ores to be found in the adjacent mountains and it stands an everlasting advertisement of their resources, on the depot platform in full view of every passing train.

Visitors chip off specimens of ore for souvenirs, ask questions and a whole lot of them come again, with money to develop mines.

The people of Albuquerque are just beginning to realize that within less than twenty miles of us, the Sandia mountains are showing some of the richest ores yet found in New Mexico.

A Citizen representative recently visited this new mining field. On the dumps of the prospect holes are to be found ore that does the eye of a mining man good.

There are all sorts of ore and it ought to be put where others can see it. A mining man stated today that there was enough ore of different varieties to build a monument such as Kingman has two stories in height.

Our Commercial club ought to see that such a monument, or some similar method of advertising, is placed on our depot platform at once.

There could not be a better advertisement and the prospectors and those actively engaged in mining operations in the Sandias and adjoining mountains would gladly furnish the ore free of charge.

Such an ad would surprise the average tourist and the average visitor. They ought not to get the impression that we depend upon tourists in winter and Indian pottery for a bare existence. Nothing could be more non-sensical.

The city also, could use thousands of postal cards with scenes of the city and her rich adjoining territory to good advantage. Post cards are not costly and a picture does not lie—when it is not a photograph constructed to make you good looking.

The Bureau of Immigration might do a whole lot of missionary work along the same line and not seriously damage itself.

While Albuquerque is better known than any other spot in New Mexico and is a thriving, growing city, at the same time much good could be accomplished by a little inexpensive advertising.

There are people who come to Albuquerque every day sightseeing, who don't know of the biggest lumber plant in the country, which is just at our city limits.

Why don't they? Because there isn't any way to find it out until they have met some of our people and have been directed to it.

With eight or nine passenger trains passing through our city every day, it's a shame that we have no better system of reaching the people they carry.

The Citizen does not for a minute mean to say that Albuquerque is not already the most enterprising city in New Mexico. She is that in every sense of the word. - But she has grown so fast and has been so busy, she is likely to forget that she still has room to grow and expand.

The advertising of a city like the advertising of a business, is absolutely necessary for substantial growth and prosperity.

Let the people know what we have—they'll do the rest.

Love and Affinities

Another busy old scientist is trying to figure out just what love is. Most any one with average experience could tell him. Its a feeling something between a shiver and a chill which hits the youth of seventeen summers on up. It makes him sad eyed, laxy and full of tumultuous emotions more or less. It makes him sit up late at night and get up late in the morning; plaster his hair down with a part in the middle of much precision; wear a necktie of violent hue; shine his shoes until he hears blisters on his hands; crumple his trousers at least once a week and carry a soiled lace handkerchief pinned to his undershirt next to his heart; and sometimes it drives him to write bad verse with the best of intentions in which event, his case is serious.

At least that is the love of the good old days.

However, if the old scientist is trying to solve the brand that causes some gray haired old fossil to shake his good old wife and six kids and go hunting for an affinity whose hair is a doubtful yellow and who wears drop-stitch hose, high heeled shoes and chews gum, then we can't elucidate more.

If that is love the best explanation that we can dig up is that it is the same sort of a feeling which tempts a man to pull the tail of the average Missouri mule and said feeling is damnfoolishness in its worst form.

A few of those Arizona papers who are continually casting aspersions upon the "uneducated native herds" of New Mexico, should remember the noble sacrifice of Jesus Garcia, a Mexican engineer, who stuck to his engine and pulled a burning train loaded with dynamite away from the little town of Naconart after the American members of the train crew had deserted their posts of duty in the face of danger. Jesus Garcia was blown to atoms with his train but he saved the town and the lives of several hundred people in it. Arizonians are not likely to erect a monument to his memory and neither is the Republic of Mexico. He was only one of the "uneducated native herds," but he had the same stuff in him which shoved row boats across the Delaware one bitter winter night. It ill behoves people who live in glass houses to throw stones.

Farrington Times, San Juan county: S. W. Wightman finished delivering his apple crop yesterday. He had 545 boxes of Fancy and No. 1, which he took off about an acre of orchard. He sold these to E. D. Kellogg, agent for the Langley Grocery Company, of Pueblo, and received $1.95 per box straight. This makes a cash receipt of $1,062.75 from about one acre of orchard. His best yields by varieties was from the Rome Beauty, with the Winesap a close second. His best tree of Rome Beauty yielded 13 boxes, and his best Winesap 12 boxes. The trees are ten years old. Several Winesap trees made 16 boxes per tree.

Schmitt and Schmitt's wife are yet to testify in the case. Another important witness will be Thomas Millet, the nurse who attended Schmitt immediately after the accident.

Henry Loeb, of the Southwestern Brewery & Ice Co., was on the stand this morning. He testified that he had made no promise to the plaintiff to repair or provide a new cooker. Thomas Isberwood was called this afternoon to give expert testimony relating to the steam fittings and strength of the cooker.

LOOKING FOR A GOOD TIME?

There are about as many conceptions as to what constitutes a "good time" as there are individuals, but there is one place in New Mexico, not very far from Albuquerque, where 99 out of every 100 people find what they are looking for. That place is the Valley Ranch, at Pecos, New Mexico. Fresh country produce in abundance, horses to ride or drive, dogs, guns, traps, tackle, all at your disposal. The finest hunting and fishing in the territory. You can live in a house, a cabin or a tent, and come and go as you please. You'll find plenty of company there, agreeable and refined. If you are socially inclined, a favorite resort for ladies. Conditions ideal for recuperating, reading, hunting or loafing. YOU CAN'T SPEND MORE THAN NINE DOLLARS A WEEK ANY WAY YOU FIX IT. Inquire at The Citizen Office for further particulars, or address The Valley Ranch.

SCHMITT SAYS THAT HE NEVER SIGNED A RELEASE

Suit Against Brewery Seems to Rest on Variety of Witnesses.

Was Joseph Schmitt unconscious, delirious and mentally incapable of signing an action when it is alleged he signed a paper releasing the Southwestern Brewery & Ice Co., from all obligations and damages on condition that he be given a lucrative position for life by the company, and be paid for time lost owing to injuries received in the brewery, are his hands in as good a condition for work now as they ever were; was the deformity in his hands caused from the burns received in the brewery? These and other equally interesting questions will be settled by the jury in the $25,000 damage suit of Joseph Schmitt against his former employer, the Southwestern Brewery & Ice Company, for burns received while operating a mash cooker which he asserts have incapacitated him from work. The case will go the jury probably tomorrow.

ALBUQUERQUE POLICE CAPTURED DIAMOND THIEF

Man Confesses and Digs Up the Sparklers--Wanted in Los Angeles.

A self confessed felon, Sam Solomon, aged 27, said to be well known in Los Angeles, is pacing a cell in the city jail waiting to be taken back to the metropolis of southern California on a warrant charging him with the theft of valuable diamond rings from a pawnbroker in the coast city. Chief McMillin was notified yesterday by wire from Chief Kern, of the Los Angeles department, that Solomon was probably a passenger on Santa Fe train No. 2. Chief Kern instructed the Albuquerque police to arrest Solomon as he held a felony warrant against him and hold him until Los Angeles officers could come after him. On the arrival of No. 2 at the Santa Fe depot this morning at 8 o'clock Officers Knapp and Quier, who were detailed on the case, boarded the train and kept a close lookout for Solomon. A man in one of the Pullmans corresponded with the description of the diamond thief furnished by the Los Angeles police and he was immediately placed under arrest. His Name Was Smith. "Wanted for felony! You are mistaken. My name is Smith and not Solomon and I don't see what under the sun you want with me," said Solomon when first placed in custody by the officers. "It may be that I am wanted as a witness in a case I was subpoenaed in," said Solomon a few minutes later. But a change came over him after he reached the city jail and had a few minutes conversation with Chief McMillin. He admitted that he was bluffing when he said his name was Smith. He said his correct name was Sam Solomon and that his home was in New York City. Then he confessed the theft of two diamond rings from his employer in Los Angeles. He said that he had been employed in a pawnbroker's shop in Los Angeles, but refused to give the name of his employer or his place of residence. Going Back to Goddard. To Chief McMillin he said he found his income was not sufficient for his needs and as he was anxious to return to his home in New York and did not have the ready cash to pay the expenses of the trip he decided to take the diamond rings and decamp for New York. He surrendered the rings to Chief McMillin, one one-carat diamond and the other seven-eights carat diamond. Solomon, alias Smith, is a stylish appearing individual. He is slender, stoop shouldered, clean shaven, light complexion, with light brown hair, thin long hatchet face and bulging forehead. He was attired in a gray, double breasted sack suit, black soft telescoped hat and medium length mixed gray overcoat. Solomon expressed no desire to communicate with friends or relatives. Chief McMillin has wired Chief Kern of Los Angeles of the arrest and confession of Solomon and is now awaiting word from the Los Angeles officers.

SNOW NORTH AND SOUTH OF ALBUQUERQUE

A cold, dismal, cloudy, back east November day greeted Albuquerque this morning. Overcoats, winter caps, ear muffs and mufflers were brought from their moth protected summer homes in the back closets and put into immediate active use, for the thermometer at the New Mexico university registered as low as 21 last night--in Albuquerque. Resurrection of Winter Wraps. Early this morning on almost any street could be seen individuals wildly swinging their arms to keep up circulation or others on a dog trot to their office, their hands covering their cold ears. It was cold, and the man with the fur overcoat and fur cap was to be envied. But at noon the overcoats, winter caps and mufflers began to disappear as quickly as they appeared. The clouds had drifted away and the sun was beginning to get in its work. In a few hours Albuquerque was again in its normal state. The Coal Man Gets His. But the cold snap put many dollars into the coal man's bulging pockets, and incidentally came very near putting a few gray hairs into his head. Orders came in thick and fast, faster than they could be filled, but the supply of coal and wood in this city was not near exhausted, so the fuel dealers say. "No, there is no shortage in the coal supply in Albuquerque," said a local dealer. "We had enough on hand to last through the coal snap and longer. But its surprising how this cold snap caught the people. You would think everybody would have on hand a supply of fuel, this time of the year, but they have not. Orders came faster than they could be filled--we positively could not fill all the orders we received yesterday. And the majority of the orders were from twenty-five cents worth of fuel up to two and three dollars worth. Lot of people came for the yards after their coal and wood, but notwithstanding that we could not fill all the delivery orders." Snow to the North. Persons arriving from the north report more snow on the Katon mountains and at Las Vegas. Two heavy freight trains creaked into the local yards early this morning bearing decidedly significant evidence that snow had been falling to the north. The tops of the cars were covered with several inches of the stuff. Snow to the South. From the south, though, comes a real plaintive cry of alarm. Snow fell in El Paso yesterday. Is it any wonder that it was cold in Albuquerque last night? The snow was preceded by sleet and the sleet was preceded by a drizzling rain, which dampened the summer feelings of all the sunny southland. It snowed at San Antonio, where the annual festival of that part of the country is taking place. They are playing base ball at Phoenix with their gloves on.
