IN NEW UNIFORMS

Volunteers at Whipple Barracks Shine Resplendent in New Blue Uniforms and Bright Buttons.

ANYTHING EXCEPT DRILL

Sergeant Leahy Will Be Satisfied With the Job of Retired Colonel on Mint Julep's List.

Whipple Barracks, Aug. 18.—Detail of the conclusion of peace negotiations and new clothes arrived at Whipple barracks simultaneously. The bright buttons and other paraphernalia, which served to disguise the boys as soldiers, failed to allay their disappointment, not having a hand in forcing Spain to sue for peace, and for a time the members of the company felt as blue as they looked in their new uniforms.

Many were the plans laid for future careers. The probable date of being mustered out was freely discussed, business partnerships were indiscriminately formed and countless towering air castles were erected. The scene reminded one of a crowd of fellows about to finish school and launch forth on life's fathomless depths, there to do heroic battle with the seething waves of vicissitude for sustenance and supremacy.

Some appeared utterly at sea and expressed a willingness to drift with the tide. Others thought of re-enlisting and seeking a berth in the regular army. The class who are, through ambition and sensitiveness, forced to believe that the world makes a distinction of the blue "soldier" and the "civilian," laid elaborate plans mentally, for positions on the uttermost round of the ladder of success. In the calculations of the latter class, the month and a half manumitted salary due from the government, was largely included. In this connection, it may be well to state that the old axiom, "Every dog has its day," is at fault, for the soldiers at Whipple are still without a pay day. If the occasion arrives this summer it will be observed with marked joy. In fact it will be made a fete day, and the more prominent exercises will consist of the flowing bowl, flowing eloquence and the flogging pay check.

The volunteers in Company C would doubtless fare well in the business world, for the personnel of the command include all manner of professional men, skilled mechanics, etc. Men who can make watches, musical instruments, stump speeches and congressmen are plentiful. The variety includes men who can do almost anything, except drill.

In the event of being mustered out, the immediate acts of some of the boys, as mapped out by your correspondent, are given below. Other fascinating and realistic acts will follow each drop of the curtain.

Sergeant Gutterman will go on the stage—from Thornton to the Grand where he will do assessment work on his mining claims.

Quartermaster Sergeant Easley will seek the staked plains—where steaks are plentiful—and issue rations to rattle the people. Sergeant Pierce will open a bank and extract nickels he has been saving for charitable purposes.

Sergeant Ormerod will remain in the service until made sergeant major of Company C, whether mustered out or not.

Sergeant Kirkman, who has an ocean in his head, will navigate it and act as special correspondent for the Trinidad Advertiser-Sentinel.

Clerk Kearney will become a poet if he lives long enough and devotes his entire time to the ambition.

Corporal Kyle will go back to Texas and get a "squaw meal."

Corporal Bent will straighten up—his business affairs and settle down on a little farm in Colorado.

Corporal Wals will make a "hot foot" for the mountains and dodge in his assessment hole whenever he sees a stranger coming around who looks like a recruiting officer.

If taken to San Francisco before being mustered out, Corporal Hart will execute a series of hand springs, making as many revolutions as a South American republic.

Corporals Read and Maestas will "double up"—if they receive any more green cucumbers from Santa Fe.

Corporal Wylly will re-enter the mining business and report himself "president or accounted for" after further explosions.

Corporal Callaghan, who thinks it is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for a corporal to escape the observant eye of the first sergeant at roll call, will refuse all inducements to soldier again.

Corporal Robinson and Private Helm will conduct a dairy.

Frank Deebel, who recently made a cake look sick, will probably join the Red Cross cough drop society.

Pearl Skinner will hunt up a poultry farm, where he will cast aside the liver pad presented him in Santa Fe and don a foot pad.

"Dynamic" Allen will make army reports and blow up company cooks.

Maurice Goldorf will seek a full grown cyclone and engage it to blow his bagle.

"Chief" Stetson will become a washerwoman—provided he can find some strong girl to do the work.

Many others will do many other things and people.

Uncle Sam "set up the drinks" to Company C this week. The treat consisted of a dose of salts to each man. Found delectable favors can be found on tap at the soda water fountains.

with relish by those who have waded through the maze of irrefragable arguments as set forth by his colleagues in previous issues of the Congressional Record.

A report is in circulation this evening that Colonel McCord is the recipient of a telegram from Washington advising him that this regiment will not be mustered out. The ultimate destination is said to be the Philippines, where garrison duty will be performed, thus discharging the specific duty for which the regiment was recruited.

After being advised of the plans for the future, to members of the Albuquerque company signed a petition directed to Secretary Alger, praying for their discharges on the ground that they did not enlist for the purpose of doing garrison duty, and that their families, gardens and other truck at home were not being properly looked after by the neighbors. In consideration of their foresight, Captain Borradaile read his command that portion of the articles of war relative to insubordination and requested the resignations of all non-commissioned officers who signed the petition. The disgruntled volunteers now think of writing President McKinley a personal letter demanding the removal of Albuquerque to some point not far distant from the post. Failing in this, they will implore General Weyler's typewriter to defer Spain's defeat until their term of enlistment expires.

A farmer, who resides a short distance from Prescott, requests the New Mexican to "give their Santa Fe fellows the devil for stealing chickens," and adds: "I wouldn't care so much, but they took all my fancy brood chickens and left the scraps."

This reasonable request should be complied with. No one's needed to kindly fires in the office at this season of the year, and the NEW MEXICAN can doubtless spare its devil until cold weather sets in. A change in ownership and pastorage might improve the temper of the devil and not seriously impair his future.

But the farmer is doubtless in error about the identity of the thieves, for the members of Company C, to a man, indignantly deny the imputation—with straight faces, too. The chickens consumed by the boys were probably let out on shares to them by the Ladies' Aid Society of Tesque.

Rumors of a recent cake walk in Santa Fe have reached this place. The winners are warned from contemplating a trip to Arizona with the spoils, as they do not desire to see another outbreak of hostilities. A lone cake, 30 miles from Whipple, would stimulate a gait on the part of the recruits, surpassing the time of a half starved horse with an elastic coil of corn attached to his bridle.

"Chief" Stetson requests the insertion of a paragraph informing the young ladies of Santa Fe that he was overlooked in the apportionment of patriotic sweethearts. It makes him feel as sad as a burro with an overcoat of corduroy, when the other boys run up to the mail man each night and receive their rations of feminine chirography. "Chief" melted the heels off a pair of rubber boots while searching to the front when the call for horses sounded: so much so that he is now suffering from a case of hemorrhoids.

He is good looking and has frequently posed as a $10,000 beauty before a Free lunch court. He is accomplished and fastidious—in the art of prevarication and has a charming voice, having taken vocal lessons of a hyena. At present he stands a mighty good show to fill an unimproved grave, provided one happens to be lying around loose some dark night when he is sneaking past the guards from a trip to town. Every soldier is entitled to from one to ten sweethearts, and to see a man sacrificing himself on the altar of his country's honor without so much as a ghost of an incentive is positively heartrending. Reference: First National Bank, Fort Whipple. "Chief" is an opportunity extraordinary and should be readily embraced by some coy maiden, inasmuch as this communication arrived just as your correspondent was going to press (the new uniform space cannot be found for further elaboration of this estimable man's qualifications and virtues).

J. F. MANNING.
