

The Microbe of Baldness.
No medical subject has caused more discussion than the statement by a famous physician that he has discovered the microbe which causes baldness. There are other scientists who claim that there is no such thing as a microbe of this kind. Time alone must settle the question. It was long ago settled that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a standard remedy for the common ailments of mankind. It is a true cure for dyspepsia, indigestion, a true medicine for the weak and nervous, a true strengthener and appetizer. People who take it feel happier, sleep sounder and look better than those who don't. Nearly every disease that afflicts the human family can be overcome with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

A CRITICAL TIME
During the Battle of Santiago.

SICK OR WELL, A RUSH NIGHT AND DAY.

The Packers at the Battle of Santiago de Cuba were all Heroes. Their Heroic Efforts in Getting Ammunition and Rations to the Front Saved the Day.

P. E. Butler, of pack-train No. 3, writing from Santiago de Cuba, on July 31, says: "We all had diarrhoea in more or less violent form, and when we landed we had no time to see a doctor, for it was a case of rush and rush night and day to keep the troops supplied with ammunition and rations, but thanks to Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, we were able to keep at work and keep our health; in fact, I sincerely believe that at one critical time this medicine was the indirect saviour of our army, for if the packers had been unable to work there would have been no way of getting supplies to the front. There were no roads that a wagon train could use. My comrade and myself had the good fortune to lay in a supply of this medicine for our pack-train before we left Tampa, and I know in four cases it absolutely saved life."

The above letter was written to the manufacturers of this medicine, the Chamberlain Medicine Co., Des Moines, Iowa. For sale by A. C. Ireland.

Burlington Route
Burlington trains run on time.

One of the principal reasons for the Burlington's popularity among Colorado travelers is the reliability of its service. Its trains run on time. If the time-card indicates that a certain Burlington train is due in a certain city at a certain hour, it may be depended upon to get there at that time, and not a minute later.

Omaha, Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis—all points east and south. Two trains a day from Denver—they leave at 9.15 a. m. and 9.50 p. m.

G. W. Vallery, General Agent, 1039 17th St. Denver.

P. S.—If you go east via Omaha and the Burlington Route, you can stop off and see the Trans-Mississippi Exposition.

Things Had Changed.
Maude Henderson Guinness was annoyed.
Sir, she protested, you forget the difference in our stations in life!
Yes, but I remember the Maine! he exclaimed, his voice thrilling.
But singularly enough, the girl's great wealth did not make her patriotic, and she laughed coldly, and in a carping spirit called attention to the fact that the protocol had been signed, and our common country was not, therefore, any longer, as it were, the only one on the dump.

THE FAIR LITTLE MAIDEN.
"There is one at the door, Wolfe O'Driscoll, at the door, who is bidding you come."
"Who is he that wakes me in the darkness, calling when all the world is dumb?"
"Six horses has he to his carriage, six horses better than your own."
"And his twelve red eyes in the shadows, twelve lamps he carries for his light."
"And his coach is a coffin black and moldy, a huge black coffin open wide."
"He asks for your soul, Wolfe O'Driscoll, who is calling at the door outside."
"Who let him through the gates of my garden, whose stronger bolts have never been?"
"The father of the fair little maiden, you drove to the grave so green."
"And who let him pass through the courtyard by loosening the bar and the chain?"
"Oh, who but the brother of the maiden, who lies in the cold and the rain!"
"Then who drew the bolts at the portal, and into my house bade him go?"
"She, the mother of the poor young maiden who lies in her youth so low!"
"Who stands, that he dare not enter, the door of my chamber, between?"
"Oh, the father of the fair little maiden who lies in the churchyard green!"

MEHMED'S LUCK.
Mehmed Agha was one of the most shiftless and useless of the refugees from Bulgaria who came to Constantinople after the Russian war made that region a Christian country. He was strong in build, he was good looking, and he seemed fairly intelligent. But to do what he would he could find no steady work. At almost any hour of almost any day his bright yellow waistcoat and crimson girdle gleamed among the shadows of the dingy little coffee houses by the carriage stand at Beshiktash, for there he lounged away his time, waiting for something to turn up. At night he wrapped himself in his brown homespun cloak and slept on one of the coffee house benches, barely tolerated by the coffee house keeper, because he, having been a refugee himself, knew the pitiful bitterness of the refugee's lot. How Mehmed lived no one knows. He was never seen face, and, with a certain amount of hesitation and incoherence, she asked the astonished old gentleman to obtain for her the hand of Mehmed the refugee in marriage. She explained that, being a lone woman, she needed a husband, and that Mehmed Agha, being a good looking man who had nothing in particular to occupy him, she fancied that he might have been destined by fate for the vacant post in her house. "Of course it will amount," she said, "to my doing everything for him, but then the poor fellow needs to have some one to take care of him."
The good man had not quite that right of disposal of Mehmed Agha's hand which Melek Hanum seemed to ascribe to him. Nevertheless as pastor of the parish he had more than once performed similar favors for anxious and hopeless ones. He therefore saw no reason to refuse to act as witness of Mehmed for the widow, and, thanks to his wise diplomacy, a match was quickly arranged.

Not long after the marriage Melek Hanum casually remarked to her husband that she knew how to make very good burek pastry cakes. "There is no reason," she said, "why you should not go out early in the morning and sell my burek cakes on the streets. People will buy them for breakfast, and we shall make on them at least enough to pay for our coal." This seemed unimpeachable sense. Thus Mehmed Agha became a burek-baker, rising early every morning and peddling the toothsome cakes from house to house in a little tray along about his neck. The profits reconciled him to the inconvenience of regular duties.

After the trade in pastry cakes had become an established and successful enterprise Melek Hanum one day hailed her husband with a new proposal. "Oh, Mehmed, soul of my soul," she said, "it is no shame to work if we can get money in that way that pay the baker's account. The neighbors have just told me from their window that Yusuf, the school porter, has gone away. He is to be stationer at Khamil Pasha's. Run quick to the imam and ask him to let you be school porter. Your burek cakes are sold off long before it is time to take the children to school. You might do this work as well as not."
The imam was kindly disposed, and so the next day, after selling his bureks, Mehmed Agha began his new duties, gathering up all the little children of the quarter and taking them and their dinner tins under his protecting shadow to the school.

After a few weeks there came again a day when the good imam knocked at the door of the little house opposite the coffee shop and called for Mehmed Agha. "May God give you endless days!" said he. "A may whom I put into the Bezestan as a burek baker. If you like, I can get you his place. Perhaps you might make a little money out of the business."
Before Mehmed Agha had a chance to answer a gentle voice from behind the screen where Melek Hanum had taken refuge on the arrival of the imam said: "Certainly Mehmed, you ought to take this position. Fortunately the Bezestan does not open until the middle of the forenoon. You will not have to hurry at all after taking the children to school. It is not every day that you can get a chance to take up a business which will pay the rent of the house." Needless to say, Mehmed Agha became a Bezestan broker. Every day after selling his burek cakes and taking the children to school he hurried over to Stamboul and spent three or four hours in perambulating the bazars, now with a switch and again with a copper kettle or perhaps an amber cigarette holder in his hand for all to see, while he cried aloud the amounts of the last bid and accepted new ones. He succeeded pretty well, for the Bezestan merchants liked his looks and his manner of talking and gave him plenty of opportunities to make his commission.

One evening when Mehmed Agha returned from Stamboul he found his wife in a state of great excitement. Hamid, the night watchman of the district, was an old man. He had now been taken sick again, and had been forced to acknowledge that he could no longer perform the duties of his office. "It is a rare chance for you, Mehmed," said Melek Hanum. "I have told the imam to recommend you to the captain of the guard for the place. The work will not interfere with your other business, and it will bring us, in at least enough to pay for our clothes."

Mehmed Agha looked rather ruefully at this new development of his good luck, but the very next night saw him installed as night watchman. He had to carry forth about two hours after sunset wrapped in his brown homespun overcoat and with his feet incased in enormous boots, with toes sharp and upturned, like the bows of a caïque. All night long with the iron ebed parochial club he had to pound out the hours in regular succession on the rough cobblestones of the pavement. A short time before daybreak he would return to his abode and take a short nap until it was time for him to begin a new day's work with slinging his tray to sell his burek cakes about the streets.

The good luck of the new friend to Mehmed Agha. Before long he found a new way to help him. One of the muzzins of the mosque of Mihrimah, near the Adrianople gate in Stamboul, was going back to his home at Aleppo. "You have a good voice," said the imam, "and you might just as well do the work of this muzzin. Happily the Bezestan closes early. There will be plenty of time. All you have to do is to run over to Mihrimah after you get through at the Bezestan. There you give the call for afternoon prayers from the minaret and sing in the choir at the service, and then you come home as comfortable as a cat that is licking her chops over the last of the little chickens."
This was becoming serious, and Mehmed nearly said that he could not undertake any more work. But as soon as his wife heard of the proposal she said: "You are already in Stamboul in any case, my lion, and you might just as well earn this money too. It will provide for our tobacco." So Mehmed Agha became muzzin at the mosque of Mihrimah in addition to his other duties.

One day after the Bezestan had closed Mehmed Agha was making all speed to reach the mosque in time, when in crossing the square in front of the mosque of Bayezid he squarely ran into a man. What was his amazement to find that this collision had brought him face to face with Osman Agha, a friend of his boyhood at his old home in Lovcha in Bulgaria. Mehmed Agha had not seen his friend since the war, but he saluted him and hurried on.

Osman Agha called after him to stop a moment, but Mehmed Agha answered, "No; I am in a great hurry, and I cannot stop."
"Man alive!" cried Osman Agha, "I have just come from your father's house, and you pass me like a cabinet minister, with a wave of the hand!" These words were uttered in a somewhat disjointed and jerky fashion, for Osman Agha was running for his life. When he had caught up with Mehmed Agha, he turned and said, "Well, how are you, and what are you doing for a living?"
Mehmed Agha made no attempt to break away and replied: "I am all right. For some time I had no work, but a woman married me, and she has found work for me, and now let me go and do it."
"But what kind of work is it that will not let you even stop to have a cup of coffee with your oldest friend?"
"Oh, it is many works. First thing in the morning I am burek baker and sell burek cakes at Beshiktash. Then I am school porter there and have to take the children to school as soon as the burek cakes are sold. As soon as the children are safely at school I am to hurry off to Stamboul, for I am a broker in the Bezestan while that is open, and I sell auction goods about the bazars. As soon as the Bezestan closes I am muzzin at the mosque of Mihrimah, and now I must go there to call the people to afternoon prayers. After the service I am night watchman until it is time to sell the burek cakes again. My wife has found me work, you see, why, man, I do not even have time to eat."

"Well," said Osman Agha indignantly, "all I have to say is that if I had a wife who made me work like that I would divorce her before sunrise!"
"That is what I would like to do," said Mehmed Agha, now for the first time recognizing his grievances. "Yes, it would be best to divorce this woman. But, then, I would have to go to the court to tell the judge that I have divorced her and to give security for the dowry money. Mercy! Don't you see, Osman, my wife would do in the work. It would take at least two hours' time! I really haven't time to be divorced!"
So saying, Mehmed Agha broke away from his friend and rushed off to the mosque of Mihrimah to call the faithful to prayers.—New York Tribune.

Personal Feeling in Battle.
Writing about the personal feeling of a commander in battle, General Schofield says in his "Forty-six Years in the Army" that in his own experience the greater the actual danger the less it was thought to be. The responsibilities of a great battle drive out all thoughts except those that are likely to lead to the final result.

At the battle of Nashville General Thomas and General Schofield sat together on a horseback on ground overlooking nearly the entire field. Occasionally when a shell exploded near and caused Thomas' horse to make a slight start, the only change visible in that calm, stout bearded soldier was a slight motion of the bridle hand to check the horse. General Schofield's own gray charger was fearless, but Thomas never noticed what effect the explosion of a shell produced on either the gray horse or his rider.

Thomas would frequently reach for Schofield's glasses, saying they were the only field glasses he had ever found of much use to him. After looking long and earnestly he would return the glasses with what seemed to be a sign of irritation or impatience.

Late in the afternoon, after using the glasses for the last time, he said to Schofield with the energy that battle alone could arouse in his calm nature: "Smith has not reached far enough to the right. Put in your troops!"
Thomas was in so strong in some generals in battle that they regretted General Schofield confesses he did several times—that rank prevents them from using a musket in the ranks.

"I have seen this pistol so strong," writes General Schofield, "that a major general commanding an army corps would dismount and act the part of gunner to a field; i. e., apparently oblivious to the fact of being all along the line of his corps."

Lack of Business Acumen.
"Aren't you sorry that you mixed corn flour with your wheat flour, now that you have been found out?" asked the job contractor.
"I should say I am," the miller admitted. "In the first place, I ought to have called it a 'beauty blend' and put it on the market at a higher price than the pure stuff."—Chicagoland Enquirer.

Out on the water in the moonlight. A more beautiful or romantic situation for a young man to tell the story of his love and ask the young woman of his choice to share his life cannot be imagined.

The courtship of a young couple may be ever so romantic and their married life be very unhappy. There are common sense considerations outside of love that have a world to do with the making of married happiness. One of the most important of these considerations is the good health of both parties to the sacred tie. The young man who is in the incipient stages of consumption commits a crime if he marries before he is restored to health. He condemns his wife to the life of a nurse and his children to early death, or lives of sickness and suffering. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption in its earlier stages. This is its record established during the past thirty years. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder, nerve-tonic and general restorative.

The young woman who suffers from weakness and disease of the delicate and important organs that make wifehood and motherhood possible has no right to answer "Yes" to a young man's proposal until she is thoroughly restored to health in a womanly way. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription prepares a woman for wifehood and motherhood. It makes her strong, healthy and vigorous where a woman most needs health, strength and vigor. Thousands of women have testified to its merits.

"My daughter," writes Mrs. N. A. Thomas, of Little Rock, Ark., "had been under a doctor's care for four years. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which cured me, also cured her."

A Leader of Men.
That man is a great political leader, said Mr. Cornsossel's neighbor.
Well, was the answer, he isn't exactly what I'd call a leader. But he certainly has a great knack of finding out which way the procession is going, and then getting 'out in front' hollerin' 'Come on, fellows!'"
