VISIONS.
Of in the dim gray twilight,
When the sun has sunk to rest,
At the end of the long day a labor,
Comes the hour that smooths the best.
When childhood's dreams come thronging
Back through the space of years;
And quiet the restless longing
That licks too deep for tears.
And I, who face a triple sun,
Mid sand-swept deserts, brown and bare,
By only the stately palm relieved,
Or cactus, weird, fantastic, rare,
Or pause awhile from daily task
To let the memories of the past,
With all their hallowed sweetness fraught,
Renew the spell that once they cast.
I see the pines so straight and dark
That clothed the lofty mountain's base
And clambered toward the heights above,
Close wrapped in fleecy cloud's embrace;
The sound of winds that sobbed and laughed,
And wildly roared round the hill,
And tossed a kiss to the sunset rays
As they sent back a bright farewell.
The plaintive call of a wild bird's note,
Like a muffled, soft love strain;
Far over the hills the lightning dash,
Through the dusk of the driving rain;
Oh, visions of the vanished past,
When life seemed hopeful and fair,
Into a tired worker's life
Ye steal like the hush of prayer.
PHOENIX, ARIZ. MISS L. E. C.

THE MEXICAN CONGRESS.
A Fine Body of Men in Full Accord With President Diaz.
The Congress of Mexico assembled in regular semi-annual session at six o'clock last night (Sept. 16) in the quaint old theater that was erected by Emperor Iturbide seventy-five years ago, and still retains much of the original decoration. The adornments are of the daintiest character, in white and gold, where they have been preserved, but the modern additions and restorations are rather incongruous.

The Hall of Congress, which formerly adjoined the Palace, was burned twenty years ago, and has never been restored because, in the opinion of the President, the financial condition of the country has not justified the expenditure necessary for the erection of a suitable building. The Senate has a chamber in the old Palace, but on the opening day the two houses always meet together and receive the President.

What used to be the parquette or the pit, is ordinarily an open space, the seats of the deputies being arranged in terraces around it; but on this occasion a number of extra chairs were brought in and the Senators occupied them in the area in front of the presiding officer. Almost everybody was in evening dress, and the speaker and several of the more formal members wore white gloves. Think of that, ye who have been the chosen representatives of the people of the United States assemble in the Halls of Congress at Washington! Think of Thomas Reed presiding over the House in a swallow-tail coat and white kid gloves, and Joseph Cannon rising to make a report from the committee on appropriations in a similar costume!

The members of the National Legislature of Mexico are a finer-looking set of men than you see in our Congress, and they all year seek. They are the cream of the country, but are by no means representative of their constituents. It cannot yet be said that the Mexicans have a representative government. One-half the population do not know who make their laws. They know El Presidente and El Gobernador, the alcalde, and the jefe politico; but farther than these the source and the exercise of authority is in the mist, and if you should ask a peon who represented him in Congress, he would answer: "Dios sabe!"—God knows, and that is sufficient for him.

I could detect but three men with signs of Indian ancestry in the entire assembly. Most of the members were of the pure Spanish type, and in their evening dress and the high silk hats they carried so gracefully, the suggested a meeting of club men instead of a legislative assembly.

The clerks and pages were in evening dress also, and a huge black cat with four white feet lay in the middle of the floor and listened attentively for an hour and quarter while the President was reading his message, as if she were fully aware of its importance.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT CONGRESS
Weather Observer A. L. White, of Phoenix, was fatally injured by an accident in the Congress mine, Sept. 28. Mr. and Mrs. White had been making a tour of the mine, in company with Prof. Goodlow and the night watchman, and the party was ascending on a train of four cars, two of which were loaded with granite, with an empty car between them, and in which Mr. White and the night watchman were riding, Mrs. White and Prof. Goodlow being on the hind car. When near the 1225 foot station, an empty ore box fell from a tunnel above on to the track and the train crashed into it. The cars were jammed together by the shock and Mr. White and the watchman were buried under a weight of granite from the cars in front and behind them. When extricated both were found to be badly bruised. Mr. White's right arm was fearfully mangled and his chest crushed. He died about 12 hours after the accident. The watchman's injuries are not fatal. Prof. Goodlow and Mrs. White were uninjured.

THE OLD HOME PAPER.
Did you ever run across an old home newspaper? Did it not prove extremely interesting as you read its columns of local news and home mention? As you look over its pages, many seeming trivial mentions carry with them a multitude of tender and pleasant associations, and you wonder that you prized the paper so little at the time it was printed, when you find it so full of interest after so many years. It is only when we get hold of some local paper and view its panorama of the past and reflect on what perfect mirrors of local events the papers are that we begin to estimate their true value as recorders of current history and realize how worthy of support and patronage is this collector and record keeper of the life and doings of the community which from week to week and year to year are so faithfully portrayed.

A LOST SPEECH.
"My funniest experience," said Gen. Russell A. Alger, "during a campaign was not on the stump, although immediately connected with the stump. I had neglected to prepare my speech, and, thinking it best to jot down a few notes, I went to the stenographer at my hotel and asked her to take my dictation. She asked whether I wanted it taken direct on the machine. I thought that way would be as good as any other and began dictating. She went right ahead, but, as I was in the midst of my peroration, she burst into tears. I wondered why my eloquence had been so melting, and asked what was the matter. "Would you mind speaking that all over again?" she said, with eyes full of tears, "I forgot to put any paper in the machine."—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Lady (to dirty tramp)—"Here's a piece of soap, and I hope you will wash yourself with it, and here's a piece of home-made cake to eat."
"Dirty Tramp (critically surveying the soap and cake)—"It the soap home-made, too, mum?"
Lady—"Of course not."
Dirty Tramp—"Then, if you don't mind, mum, I'd rather eat the soap and scrub myself with the cake."
