THE FRENCH BALLOONS.—Only five of the balloons sent out from Paris during the siege were actually taken by the Germans, although, as may be supposed, many had very narrow escapes, sixteen in all falling within the enemy's lines. Two of these there was no chance of saving, for they went right over the hostile territory; one of these unfortunate convoyees descended in Prussia, and the other in Bavaria. Several accidents happened to the aeromats in their descents, but if we except two instances of balloons going out to sea, only one of these ended fatally. Of the sixty-four balloons dispatched, fifty-seven reached a safe destination, carrying one hundred and fifty navigators and passengers. The duration of a voyage was, on an average, but three hours at the commencement of the service in September, 1870; but as the German troops approached nearer and surrounded the capital more effectually, it was deemed desirable to make a longer journey, and in January the average voyage was between six and seven hours. At this period, too, it was found necessary to dispatch the balloons during the night, so that they might get a fair start and be well out of rifle shot when passing over Versailles and the outposts of the German army. The memorable voyage was made on the 21st of November, when the North Sea was traversed by a balloon which reached Christiania, after a voyage of some fourteen hours. The distance traveled was certainly not less than 1,000 miles and at the rate of seventy miles an hour—beyond doubt the fastest rate of locomotion on record. The balloons themselves were constructed of oiled silk, and mostly contained some 2,000 metres of gas. They were designed and manufactured under the superintendence of M. Godard, whose name as an aerostat was well established before the siege. A number of volunteers from the French navy, chosen for their peculiar fitness for the service, were trained to navigate the balloons. Most of the balloons carried passengers, and generally several hundred-weight of dispatches, together with a basket of pigeons to employ as return messengers.

MANAGEMENT OF RAILROADS.—There is a law in Austria authorizing the Government to take possession of any railroad and manage it, at the expense of the owners, if the line is not kept in good order for traffic, or if there is any mismanagement affecting the interests of the public. Recently the Government seized the Lemberg-Czernowitz Railway, the Company, after repeated warnings from the Government, having failed to remedy numerous defects and evils in the construction and management of the road. It will be remembered that J. P. Jones, candidate for U. S. Senator from this State, advanced a similar idea in a speech delivered at Virginia City, just prior to the election. "Something of the kind," remarks the Vallego Independent, "will become necessary before many years elapse, if the power and insolence of these corporations continue to grow as they have of late years." About the only valid objection that can be urged against this course is the centralizing tendencies that would naturally and inevitably follow. We Democrats, in particular, have always opposed the concentration of too much power at Washington.—Eureka Sentinel.

DEATH OF HON. EDMOND PATTER.—Hon. Edmond Patten, who has been confined to his house for several months with disease of the heart, died at Gold Hill at 9 o'clock last evening. Mr. Patten was a member of the first Legislature of Nevada, being elected to the Assembly from this county. He was thence among the best legislators in that body. He has been a resident of this county about ten years, and became early identified with our mining and milling interests. He leaves an estate worth more than half a million of dollars, a widow and six children. He was a native of Ireland, and about 47 years of age at the time of his death.
