

The Rev. G. M. Gordon, writing in the Church Missionary Intelligence, thus describes the reputed site of the Tower of Babel.

A high mound is surmounted by a ruined and unfinished tower of brick, the summit of which is 235 feet above the plain.

It is composed of the same elements as the mounds of Babylon—masses of brick and rubbish, interspersed with broken pottery.

These bricks are all of them inscribed on one side with cuneiform characters. The cuneiform in the ancient Assyrian, and is supposed to be the oldest written language in the world.

One side, where excavations have been made, you may see walls of brick ascending tier above tier with masonry embellishments. On another, all in confusion and disturbance—huge masses of brick work, rent and returned, yet so solid in their construction that it is easier to pulverize the brick than to separate it from the mortar.

One of these blocks rolled bodily to the foot of the mound. Others are vitrified or fused by a process which can be none other than electricity or fire.

Curiously enough the Arabs have a tradition that it has been destroyed by fire from heaven. The sides of the mound are pierced with holes and strewn with bones, which plainly indicate the lairs of wild beasts.

The view from the summit at sunrise is distant and varied. The broad sheet of the Euphrates winds for many a mile, until lost in the distance in the "sea-like plain. It is difficult to resist the conviction that Birs Nimrod is the Tower of Babel, the oldest ruin in the world.

There are those who (like Mr. Rich) believe it to be the Tower of Belus, and regard it as a part of the ruin of Babylon, and I prefer to hold the older tradition, and, surely, it is, when standing on ground like this, that the language of the Scriptures acquires a vividness and reality which rewards the toil of patient investigation, and makes the privations of travel forgotten; and a voice seems to breathe from the ruins, and place of the prophets beside these mighty rivers which is daily more heard and felt, rebuking the sneer of the scoffer and the skeptic.

SOME young men are a little partial to blue-eyed maidens. Others like dark-eyed lasses, but non-eyed girls have the most admirers.
