A CLOSE SHAVE

Many of Them Happening Every Day but Soon Forgotten.

Close shaves would be of more frequent occurrence but for the tender faces of many men, which will not permit of shaving. Heretofore, nothing has been said in these columns about posam, a new skin discovery, in connection with its use after shaving. Its publicity and sales have been confined almost exclusively to its remarkable properties as an eczema cure; it stops the itching at once and cures the worst cases in a few days. While the application of posam after shaving is one of its minor uses, such as for pimples, the complexion, etc., shavers will find it a revelation, as it does for abrasions, roughness, and severe scrapings what it does for all manner of skin difficulties—heals and cures in a few hours. It is the only article possessing real antiseptic and curative value that has ever been exploited for this purpose, and will soothe and tone up the skin as no toilet preparation could possibly do. Posam can be had for fifty cents at any reliable druggist's, particularly Hamilton's Pharmacy, or the Emergency Laboratories, No. 32 West 25th St., New York City, will send a trial supply free by mail to any one who will write for it. This is sufficient to show results in 24 hours.

YALE LOSES

REGISTRATION

New Conditions of Law and Medical School Entrance Requirements Cause Big Decrease.

CLASS DROPS FROM 200 TO 5

Although no official figures have been computed yet, it is generally supposed that the total registration in Yale university for the present year will be one or two hundred below that of last year. This is owing to the great decrease in the numbers entering the Yale law and medical schools under the new requirements. It could not be authentically stated until all of the students have entered their names, but it is known that there will not be more than 50 or sixty in the first-year class of the law department as against close to 200 a year ago, and about 30 in the medical school as compared with about 80 last year. Those in a position to realize the situation say that this decrease is not a bit surprising.

Until this fall, the entrance requirements to the two departments named were that a student should have what amounted to a high school education. Many young men who had only gone three years to a high school managed to get by the examinations which were very easy, and those that had a high school diploma were allowed to enter upon it if the school was recognized as a standard one without taking any examinations. It is now that professional schools at Yale did not come up to the usual standard for admission requirements.

The leading reformers in the university long realized that there would have to be a raising of these requirements to satisfy what they considered to be the present needs for a law university. So it was voted three years ago to make it a requirement of admission that every applicant should be able to show a certificate that he had successfully passed two years of college work in a recognized college or university, or else that he had and could prove the ability to pass examinations equal to those that would be given to classes finishing their second year in the college course.

As soon as this announcement was made, there was a great increase in the attendance at the professional schools, as large numbers took advantage of the three-year limit that was set before the new requirements would be put into operation. The class of 1909, which just graduated, entered 125 strong, a record for the school. The class of 1910 broke the record again, to be beaten by 1911, with nearly 200 men. This was in the Law school. The figures in the Medical school show the same proportional increases.

The new rules applied to the classes that enter this fall. As a very large percentage of the other classes were not within the new requirements, it is not so surprising as it might seem, university authorities have declared that the registration should fall off so in numbers. It is thought, that the new requirements will greatly raise the standard of the professional schools, and in time they will be made graduate schools, where none but those holding college degrees will be admitted. As it is, most of the students would take two years of college work without finishing or just to go to the Yale schools.

LAUDS JOHNSON IN HER SPEECH

Miss Schaller Officially Represents Her State in Silver Service Presentation to Warship Minnesota.

ADDRESS EVOKES ENTHUSIASTIC CHEERS

New York, Oct. 5.—Standing in front of the great after 12-inch turret of the battleship Minnesota, Miss Rose Marie Schaller of Hastings, Minn., as the official representative of her State, presented to that battleship what is said to be the most magnificent silver service ever given to an American warship. Four years ago Miss Schaller had broken a bottle of wine on the bow of the giant battleship as she left the ways, and yesterday she became the first woman in the navy's history to officially represent a State in making the customary presentation of a silver service to a new warship.

Miss Schaller, a tall, graceful girl, dressed in white and wearing a large hat covered with white plumes, was a pretty picture as she faced Commander William S. Sims of the battleship, to whose custody, as the representative of the Navy Department, the service was entrusted. The bluejackets were massed on the top of the turret and on the bridge behind Miss Schaller while she was speaking, and when she had ended the sailors cheered uproariously for the girl whose picture has had the place of honor in the Captain's quarters of the Minnesota, since she went into commission over two years ago.

The late Gov. Johnson of Minnesota was to have accompanied the Minnesota delegation to New York had he lived, and Miss Schaller's little speech of presentation was largely a eulogy of the dead executive of her State, to whom, with tears in her eyes, she referred as one who had forever entrenched himself in the hearts of Minnesotans.

More than 300 guests were present, Captain Hugo Osterhaus, commanding the Second Division of the Atlantic Fleet; Commander Sims, Flag Lieut. Berry, Lieut. King, Capt. Osterhaus' aid, and Lieut. Commanders W. K. Harrison, O. P. Jackson, L. C. Wetzel, and R. I. Curtin received the guests on the after deck of the battleship.

The silver service of fifty-six pieces had been placed on an onyx table and covered with a large American flag that was not removed until Miss Schaller had been introduced. Behind Miss Schaller as she spoke was a stand of colors that were also presented to the ship by the State whose name she bore. Commander Sims himself was not forgotten, and when the ship presentations were over, Harry Lewis of St. Paul presented the Commander with a gold cigarette case.

MISS SCHALLER'S SPEECH. Miss Schaller was escorted to her place in front of the turret by Capt. Osterhaus, and Commander Sims stepped forward and stood at attention about ten paces in front of her. O. Cullen Calhoun, one of the Minnesota Commissioners, introduced Miss Schaller as one of his State's "loveliest daughters," and then Miss Schaller made her speech. She said: "Four years ago the people of the State whose name it bears rejoiced because the battleship Minnesota had been successfully launched. I had the honor of being her sponsor, and as she slipped into the water of the great deep and made her bow to the element which she had forever renounced my heart went with her and she has held it ever since.

"I have followed her career with a motherly pride—I have rejoiced in her achievements, and together with the people of our State, devoured every scrap of news which told that she was proving herself to be everything we have had her would be. "The Governor of Minnesota, during whose term this ship was launched, had at that time occupied that office about four months, but even in that short space of time he had intrenched himself in the hearts of the people of Minnesota.

"A little more than four years ago the man, all unknown except to a few, was launched into public life, and in a very short time had grown to National proportions. "Just as this ship day by day took on beauty and strength, power and dignity, until she rode the seas a perfect work of art, day by day our Governor showed forth those qualities of heart and mind which so endeared him to us. His public life spanned less than five years, but his memory will be green in our hearts until time is no more.

"He was more than the representative of the law to us—he drew all hearts to him—men honored him, but the children loved him.

"In the Winter of 1907 our Legislature passed a bill providing money for a gift to our ship. Gov. Johnson was greatly interested in the passage of the bill, and it was largely due to him that we are able to-day to present to you this silver service. It was exceedingly fitting, therefore, that when his body was put into its last resting place this ship should have displayed her emblems of mourning—displayed her flag at half-mast."
