PARENTS DEMAND CHILD ANOTHER HAS REARED

George H. and Nellie T. Ross, husband and wife of Northford, brought habeas corpus proceedings against Mary Barry, also of Northford, asking the Common Pleas court to have the defendant show cause why she should not produce the body of their daughter, Rita Ross.

The case was to have been heard by Judge Howard E. Scott this morning but was continued until Friday. The defendant answers that she is not imprisoning, or in any wise restraining Miss Ross from her liberty, or preventing her from going to her parents as she chooses.

The girl is now past 14 years of age, and has been with Miss Barry since she was three weeks old. Her benefactor educated, clothed and instructed her in music during her life time. She is at present at liberty to go to her father and mother if she desires.

The defendant says that the mother is an unsuitable person, as she has tuberculosis in a very advanced stage, and the home of her parents is not such as would be desirable for the girl. The girl has expressed a desire to stay with Miss Barry.

KING SAVES PLOT WAS HATCHED TO KILL HIM

Police Look for Missing Chinaman, Who Decamped After Committing An Assault.

A warrant was issued this morning by Prosecutor DeLaney for the arrest of Leon Dick Ching, nephew of Charles Hung whose place was raided by the police Sunday evening.

Ching is charged with assaulting Charles King the Wood avenue laundryman with a stick. The assault occurred yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the laundry of Charles Lee at 1639 Main street, at Bull's Head, Ching and King met in Lee's laundry and Ching at once accused King of informing on the men who were arrested in the raid.

King protested against this allegation and was hit over the right eye with a stick. The eye was badly cut and discolored. After the quarrel King reported the matter to Policeman McRigan and complained to the prosecutor.

At press hour Ching had not been caught. It is surmised that he has left the city. It caught the trail he must furnish for his release.

Charles King is the father of King twins who have run away from home together and separately. Mr. King is married to a white woman. He is a Christian and bears a good reputation. His laundry is at 223 Wood avenue.

His presence at police headquarters yesterday when his nephew Ching was there under arrest may have had a great deal to do with his being picked out by them as the informant. King alleged that Ching was hired by another Chinaman to kill him, King, and was promised $100 and all expenses if he did the job. Mr. King spoke of this seriously but the police are inclined to doubt it.

Ching's reputation is not a good one. He is a member of the Hip Sing Tong and spends some of his time in New York.

Wonders of a Japanese Hamlet.

Perhaps the most astonishing presentation of "Hamlet" ever seen on any stage was a Japanese version given by native actors at Kobe. The Kobe Herald describes it as "a wonderful mixture of the beautiful and the grotesque. With an Ophelia sometimes in graceful kimono and sometimes in western evening costume and a king who at one time appears in the picturesque costume of a Japanese nobleman and at others dons a silk hat and a swallowtail coat, the effect is so kaleidoscopic that a spectator has the sensation of being perpetually transferred from one phase of civilization to another. The climax is reached in Hamlet himself, who in the earlier scenes wears the uniform of a student of the imperial university, in the third act makes his appearance on a bicycle, clad in a bright blue cycling suit and striped stockings, and at the finish is seen in conventional evening dress with a flower in his buttonhole."

The Sixteenth Century Carver.

At the formal banquet of the sixteenth century the man who carved the meat was bound with the red tape of precedent. When carving for distinguished guests he had to remember that certain parts of the birds or meat must be set aside. In carving for his lord and lady he was expected to exercise great discretion in the size of the pieces he sent round, "for ladies will be soon angry and their thoughts soon changed, and some lords are makes his appearance on a bicycle, clad in a bright blue cycling suit and striped stockings, and at the finish is seen in conventional evening dress with a flower in his buttonhole."

A Hungry Rabbit.

"I do not think I was ever so nonplussed in my life," said a conjurer, "as once when performing my card and rabbit trick. I ask a member of the audience to tear a card into small pieces and give them all to me except one. Later in the trick I produce a rabbit from a box, and tied round its neck is a card with a piece missing. It is then found that the piece which the member of the audience holds exactly fits and completes the second card. On this particular occasion I allowed the rabbit to remain in the box too long and when I produced him he found that he had chewed the card round his neck to bits. Needless to say, the laughter when the audience grasped the trick the animal had played on me was loud and long."

As Walter Saw It.

Walter, aged seven, is a wise son who knows not only his own father, but his own mother likewise. "Now, Walter," said the teacher, "if your father could do a piece of work in one hour and your mother could also do it in one hour, how long would it take both of them to do it together?" "Three hours," replied the scholar without hesitation.

"Wrong!" said the teacher. "How do you make that?" "Three hours," repeated Walter stolidly, "counting the time they'd waste arguing about how it should be done." —London Scraps.

All Marriages Are Love Marriages.

"Was it a love marriage, do you think?" "Certainly. All marriages are love marriages." "Isn't that rather a sweeping statement?" "Not at all. There is a love of adventure, you know; love of luxury, love of details when one speaks of a love marriage." —Chicago Post.

As to Luck.

"I wonder if anybody's as unlucky as I am," grumbled the first pessimist. "I never have any luck at all." "Hub!" snorted the other. "You're lucky. It's better to never have any luck at all than to be always having bad luck like me." —Philadelphia Press.

Utter Complaint.

"I s'pose you wouldn't marry me if I were the only man on earth?" "I wouldn't even be engaged to you," responded the girl, "if you were the only man at a summer resort." —Kansas City Journal.

MME. STEINHELL IS DRIVEN WILD BY EXCITEMENT

(Special from United Press.) Paris, Nov. 9.—Fully as much mystery today surrounds the trial of Madame Marguerite Steinhell for the murder of her husband and mother as enshrouds the crime with which she is charged. At every stage the proceedings of the court grow more mixed. The most commonplace question put to an unimportant witness seemed pregnant with dire importance and the judge, jury and spectators, as well as the black clad prisoner, wait breathlessly for an answer.

Madame Steinhell's defense suffered the most disastrous development of the trial today in the statement made by the widow immediately after the crime, that 23 pieces of jewelry were missing from the house. Witnesses today testified that three of these pieces of jewelry were given to a jeweler by Madame Steinhell to be altered, and that four other pieces were found in the house after the murders. The inference drawn by the prosecution is that Madame Steinhell was endeavoring to make it appear that the motive for the crime was robbery.

When the trend of this testimony became apparent Madame Steinhell jumped to her feet to explain away the damaging statement she made after the crime.

"I was irresponsible when I said those things. My husband and mother had just been murdered. You must not condemn me on that statement," she cried.

De Valles interrupted and tried to quiet her, but she would not be still. "I did not know what I was saying," she shouted. "I was a mania driven wild by the excitement and the agony."

It took some time to quiet the tumult that the woman aroused among the spectators.

Several newspaper men testified regarding Madame Steinhell's accusation of Alexander Wolf, son of Marietta Wolf, the house at the time of the murders. Madame Steinhell, they said, was in a state of wild excitement, talking excitedly hysterically. She talked excitedly with Mariette before talking to the newspaper men.

Madame Steinhell turned to Madame Steinhell. "Did you try to kill yourself after Mariette's attempt?" she shouted. "Alas, no," she replied shuddering and sorrowfully.

The judge turned against Madame Steinhell today in her fight to escape the guillotine for the murder of her husband and mother, and toward the close of the afternoon session her look seemed blacker than it has since the trial began. It was rumored that Mariette Wolf, cook in the Steinhell household at the time of the murders, was to be arrested as an accomplice in the murders, and that a young official, son of a prominent politician, is also to be arrested in connection with the case.

The sudden shifting in the trend of the testimony which until this afternoon had been almost uniformly in favor of the little black clad woman who is making her fight alone, came when a number of journalists took the stand this afternoon. M. Barbry, one of them, astounded the court room by opening his testimony with the statement that Madame Steinhell, when he was arrested after the crime, begged him to kill her although she had never seen him before.

"Just as she asked me to take her life," said Barbry, while all the court room was in a hush of expectancy. "Mariette Wolf, the Steinhell household cook, entered the room. She asked me to kill her. I refused, and rushing to her, threw her arms about her neck. As they parted, Madame Steinhell said: 'In case I am arrested do not tell me anything.'"

"Fear nothing, I will deny all," replied Mariette.

Judge De Valles jumped to his feet and turning to Madame Steinhell, who crouched trembling in her chair, thundered, "Did you say that?" For fully a minute the accused woman was silent. "I don't remember," she whispered.

"Did you ask for strychnine later that you might kill yourself?" After another lengthy pause, Madame Steinhell jumped to her feet. "I have told you I don't remember," she cried. Then she turned to the jury.

"They are torturing me, killing me," she shrieked. "How am I to know the things I did in those terrible hours, it is worse than death to torture me."

Another witness testified that when Mariette heard that her mistress had been arrested, she became crazed and threatened to kill herself.

MRS. STETSON IS NOT VITAL ISSUE

(Special from United Press.) New York, Nov. 8.—Mrs. Stetson is no longer the vital issue of First Church of Christ, Scientist, controversy. Both the Boston mother church and the local church have passed upon her case. The question that now dominates the church is whether a woman seeking the control of the church, shall be permitted to override the constituted authorities.

This is the text of a statement given this afternoon to the United Press by John Franklin Crowell, secretary of the board of inquiry that found Mrs. Stetson guilty of the charges made against her by the Boston directors.

Consider weight and weave when you choose table-linen.

Nice finish and pretty pattern are worth while. But neither is of such importance as weave and weight. These last are what give strength and wearing power to table linen. It is they that make it worth possessing. It is they that bring real satisfaction to the housewife; that are a source of pride. The close firm-woven linen, the solid linen, the linen that has substance; such linen has truest sort of beauty and beauty that is lasting.

It pays to buy such linen; pays in the satisfaction there is in using it as well as in the long service it gives. It pays to sell such linen; the store feels that it is giving folks merchandise that they will be thoroughly satisfied with when it sells such linens.

There is linen which is not all-linen but is good. It has substance and appearance and durability. This store sells it; a lot of it. But it always sells it for what it really is. Nothing but pure linen is counted as true linen here. That is only fair. And, oddly enough, many folks have found this mixed linen quite satisfactory for many uses. After all, though, there is nothing equal to true and pure linen. And right now there is excellent store and variety of it—a variety that will be full of appeal to the woman planning new table-fittings for the Thanksgiving feast.

Not Many Store-Sales Are Uninfluenced by Store-Advertising!

The store-sales to-day that are uninfluenced, directly or indirectly, by store-advertising will not have amounted to ten per cent. of the total business of the day. By the direct influence of advertising is meant the sales of articles specifically advertised. By the indirect influence of advertising is meant the articles sold that are not specifically advertised, but are displayed to the customers who are drawn to the store by THE ADVERTISED ARTICLES. In the latter case, as surely as in the first, the advertising must be credited with the sale.

Observant merchants know that this is true. They should gain courage from the knowledge to strengthen their advertising campaigns to the point of matching their store-hopes and plans.
