GOULD MAKES ALDERMEN DO FINE STUNTS

Railroad Counsel Spock, Little Grip in Hand, Sees Performance

After Vote in Congress Street Widening Lawyer Picks up Grip and Leaves Council Chamber

Alderman R. H. Gould made the majority of the members of the board of aldermen run around, roll over and jump through last night for the edification of Benjamin I. Spock, attorney for the Connecticut Co., who sat with the spectators in the council chamber, last night. Mr. Spock entered the council chamber almost unnoticed with a little leather grip and left almost unnoticed. Mr. Spock had nothing to say, but he took much interest in the Congress street widening matter.

Under the leadership of Attorney Gould the aldermen voted by a majority of 13 to 1 to allow the board of appraisal to ascertain the cost of widening Congress street on the south side.

The street committee made a unanimous report in favor of ordering a widening on both sides. Chairman McMurray said that after the cost of widening on both sides was learned that it would be an easy matter for the board to take the action it wanted to widen upon. He moved the adoption of the resolution.

Alderman Primrose moved to amend the report by striking out the word "south." Then Alderman Gould moved that the board take a recess of five minutes to consider the report.

Alderman McMurray said that it was not necessary to take a recess to consider the matter as the committee was ready to give the council any information it wanted. He declared that it was never known where the clerk had read clearly and that his enunciation was good. The vote to take the recess by a vote of 16 to 3.

During the recess Alderman Gould had a chat with Attorney Spock from New Haven.

When the aldermen had reconvened Alderman Primrose had a written amendment to substitute for his verbal one.

In the discussion which followed Alderman Gould expressed doubts as to the legality of the report of the committee and gave the lay members of the council the benefit of his legal knowledge. Griffin said "the phraseology of the report is such that lawyer and layman cannot understand it."

Those who voted for the amendment to consider the north side only were Alderman Mahoney, Cassidy, Walker, Griffin, Foyrer and Foyrer, Fletcher, Bullard, O'Connell, Zink, Gould, Bertilson and Primrose.

The 11 who voted "no" and who wanted to know the cost of the south side as well as the north, but lost, were Alderman McMurray, Clappett, Conlin, Reddy, Brady, Lavery, O'Neil, Jackson, Stewart, Foyrer and Meyer.

After the vote was taken the tall young lawyer, still carrying the little grip, left the building with a smile. He was undoubtedly of the opinion that Gould was some pumpkins as an alderman ringmaster.

While the vote on the matter was being taken Alderman O'Connell had to be awakened to vote. Alderman Widlar had put his views upon the widening question into writing and he spent the best part of a half hour in reading them. During the reading he was interrupted from the right by the sound of a door opening and lapsed into the arms of Morpheus.
