EDUCATORS HEAR PLEA FOR PUPILS

Asked to Abandon Law That Compels Vaccination

Foes of vaccination carried their fight in behalf of 5,000 unenrolled school children of the board of education yesterday, when the special committee, composed of Mrs. Ellen Spencer Mussey, chairman, Henry T. Blakely, and Chap. James F. Oyster, met at the Franklin School and heard arguments. The specific case of the Castle children, who were excluded from school because their parents refused to subject them to the serum points, was presented by the committee.

DECLARE RULES CONFLICT

It was declared by the anti-vaccination counsel that the compulsory vaccination law was unconstitutional, and in conflict with the compulsory education law, in so much as it compelled parents to favor something which may be contrary to their wishes as free citizens of the country. If a parent should not desire to have his child marked by varioloid, as the constitution is construed as giving him the right, he must change his mind, or go to jail, the attorneys declared, because the compulsory vaccination law requires the school children to be vaccinated. There is no smallpox in Washington, and no need for vaccination, anyway, the attorneys declared. With the Anti-Vaccination Society, the Personal Liberty League, and the Federation of Citizens' Associations in the fight against vaccination, there are now more than 10,000 citizens behind the fight of the Castle children, and the case will be carried to the highest court if the school board decides at its next meeting it cannot suspend the regulations. Public funds will be received for the fight, and a committee of four prominent men have been appointed to receive these funds. This committee is as follows: William F. Gude, president of the Chamber of Commerce; W. McK. Clayton, president of the Federation of Citizens' Associations; Harry B. Bradford of Kensington, Md., president of the Anti-Vaccination Society; and F. D. Scott, the society's secretary and

HUMOR OF THE HEN ENTERTAINS THE STOVE CLUB

The Monroe Stove Club, in the rush of the harvest work, being unable for some time yet, to get largely together, at their first fall muster and purposefully for hearing a reading of the below original paper, prepared by the "Literary" of the club, it is herewith sent to the Farmer, for publication, by request. It is as follows:

HUMOR AND THE HEN.

"The hen—the humble hen, has in late years assumed a most important place in the economics of the nation," so prints a late newspaper in the lead of an enthusiastic resume relative to poultry products. We might paraphrase this by saying, that the hen, the humble or otherwise, has also contributed greatly to the "economy of the nation." In newspaper print, as evolved by the so-called hen joke writers, an incubator is to say in the various periodical prints of the day. It has been alleged, that said publications for their comic columns, always employ a hen print agent. He's a wonder, just let a brain-storm sweep away funny ideas in other matters, and he'll be up to his eyes in hatches out a hen joke and the job is saved. These writers began on the hen joke, back in the years when the mule funniness lost class. Let us see. Harking back through the many dead and gone decades, of civilization's time one fails to discover just where or when, humor and the hen became affiliates. In print or otherwise. There are brave people, even today, who will wager ten to one, or any other long shot, that the truly first hen joke was a conundrum and that it was originally incubated just after Noah broke up housekeeping in the ark. Think it over. There being nothing doing around Ararat, a minstrel troupe started out to recoup the fallen fortunes from the flood. Their star conundrum still survives. You've heard it. It has escaped death and "moving accidents by flood and field" and chloroform.

Here it is, "Why does a hen cross the street?" The hen jostler attaches children to his creation, plentifully of late years and says, Here's a sample. "A little girl pecking over a dead pig rooster," said, "He was always so noisy when one of the hens laid on egg." There are others. Then again, "Mrs. Nouveau Rich, when asked if her country house hen's laid every day, said: "Of course, but in our position it is not necessary."

The farmer gets touched by making him say, after seeing an educated hen: "I don't care for vaudeville hens, they'd better stick to the legitimate side of the business, and when they come to the raw day when the papers fall to print things in the above vein. But the hen humorist dips in some when it comes to varying in quotations, etc., etc. No "funnyman" of a publication never can get in wrong when he works up a "chicken card." Everything goes on the hen.

We have just two "terrible examples" as per the following to offer: "Man want but little here below, quote one except as follows: "This hen'd muchly like to know, how to make hens lay, with egg prices strong." And this, "A lot of changes suit my view. At our boarding house—no interludes; his breakfast eggs the whole year through." And so it goes, as "many as the leaves of Vallambrosa." The "eternal feminine," pre-eminently sexual editors, they get "humorisms." The rooster doesn't get much from the press agents incubator. Akin to "mere man" in a superficial sense, the rooster keeps pecking and throwing out his chest and his voice, overtime. Why is this then?

Oh, the old bluffer has only discovered a wee bit of a bug. But variously, the hen press agents are often making good. An informed writer lately has said, regarding those newspaper poets: "I succeeded in catching the popular vein as concentrated in the eagle eyes and minds of a score or more of the exchange editors. They were all the happiness of seeing their verse printed widely and that's something, if not in fame, then in valary."

PUBLIC OPINION

Editor Farmer, Sir: Not locust, the Reduction plant in the center of the city. The writer would suggest the square bounded by the East, John on the South and Courtland on the West. There would be no danger of any kick or injunction from residents, as they all have become so saturated with odors that emanate from their surrounding, that a small thing like a Reduction plant would not be noticed. The odor from a tannery was at one time objectionable, but they take it without winking. The people could hardly breathe without spitting cotton. Now they take the smoke for the catarrh. A couple of livery stables in the same square, send forth a more fragrant odor, and the people are gaining strength on it every day. A couple of garages send out their gasoline perfume that makes one think they are enjoying an auto trip. Then one new motor concern has installed a kerosene engine, the odor from this has your gasoline beat, and to a frazzle—and intermixed with this is a wood pattern shop that burns their shavings in the back yard, this smoke although hard on the lungs and eyesight, gives one an idea of London fog. Now add the odors from a Reduction plant and the various articles combined together would be worth getting patented and labelled Anti-Odor smell, good for what ails you.
