Little Beauty Chats

BY BLANCHE BEACON

WHEN THE BREATH IS TAINTED

Remember that no chin you may be so fortunate as to possess will stand for a bad breath. Remember, also, that all too often the victim of this disorder is the last one to be conscious of it.

Only the other day I was told by a physician of a girl who could find out if one was possessed of a bad breath, and I, thinking of you, secreted this information in a brain cell, intending to chat about this subject some fine day.

Whenever you notice a bad taste in your mouth, malds and malds, wait not, but hastening to your room, hold a hand mirror close to your mouth. Now exhale upon the mirror and if your breath carries any suggestion of intruder, be sure you will be made aware of it.

Should you find yourself the possessor of a breath not absolutely as sweet as it should be, go to the root of the matter.

First, put on your hat and visit your dentist and doctor as it may be your teeth are decayed and need attention, or that you are a victim of catarrh.

If you return home with a "clean bill of health" in regard to catarrh and defective teeth, then you can only conclude that constipation or indigestion are the cause of your trouble.

If the eliminative organs are inactive, try some one of the fruit cathartics—they are effective and taste delicious. A good laxative is made by taking one-half pound each of raisins and figs and one ounce of prunes, and after chopping until fine, putting them in a pan with a half pound of sugar and one cup of boiling water. This pan should now be put on the stove and the mixture let simmer for twenty minutes when it should be poured on oiled paper to cool. Take a square inch at bedtime and afterwards regulate the size of the dose by effect.

If it is the stomach that is at fault then mend your eating ways.

He didn't stop to think he was a long way from the ground and the ledge very narrow. Carefully he climbed out and walked along until he could see the boys playing. That was fine but he was so intent watching them that he didn't see his mother out in the garden, or that she had seen him standing outside the window.

MISS LIBBY'S REPLIES TO YOUR LETTERS

(Address letters to Laura Jean Libby, 916 President Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.) (Correct name and address must be given to insure attention, but not to print.)

If She Tells She's Married

Dear Miss Libby: I am a girl of sixteen. Was forced to marry a man I left him. Had mail from him after I was away a year. He wanted me to come back. He was not very good to me. There is a young man who thinks a lot of me but I don't know if I should tell him I am married, or not. Please advise me what to do in this.

Got Married in a Hurry

Dear Miss Libby: I am a young man who got married in a hurry to a young girl. We lived in the city awhile, came and lived with my mother, while I was unemployed. Parents told her I did not try ever to find a job. I succeeded, sent for her; she came. Her father and mother came between us. Then she did not show the same love for me. We had words. My mother tried to patch up our differences, but in vain. I bought her nice clothes. I loved her, with all my heart. Her parents told me, they would never let her return to me, and acted badly. Do you think I deserved to be thus treated? I loved her, treated her good. A husband can never treat a wife too good. Oblige me by your good advice. J. J. I. I am filled with regret to read of the unhappy climax of your marriage. While there is life there is always a chance to find the better side of life. Circumstances may change with you and for the better. Keep hope bright within you. Find steady employment. Continue her by heartily applying your time to your duty. Write her a few lines urging her to come and try once more to make your home happy, as you will regret the time when she will soften to your pleadings. A new leaf will be turned over for the better, and the course of true love will run smoothly. It is to be hoped.

She Would Be a Writer

Dear Miss Libby: I have decided to become a writer. How can I make a success with my pen? I believe it to be lighter than the sword. AMELIA. Write something worth while, then

Women Who Rush To Sensational Court-Trials

"Vice is a monster of so frightful mien As to be hated needs but to be seen; Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face, We must endure, then pity, then embrace."

Gentlewomen, kind as a rule, look with horror upon scandals. But at the same time, if there's anything worth while going on, they want to know all about it. They do not approve of unsavory tales. Certainly not, oh dear no! But if the matter gets into court they have all of Mother Eve's curiosity, and they want to know especially if the affair smacks of romance.

If there is a breach of promise suit, did you ever notice how fair women crowded the court room? Not women alone of the ordinary type, but the upper crust of society is among the throng of eager listeners to the salacious bickering of counsel. They smile and giggle over the man's excuses and glare letters as they are read and crane their necks to listen to what her reply was. They do not shrink from hearing the innermost secrets of the heart.

Many a husband is in blissful ignorance of his wife's whereabouts. Of course she has not thought of leaving him, but she does not think it worth while to tell him that she left her presence there. It has been suggested that, seeing this is the fashion, considering the cost of these trials and the entertainment provided the high class, witty, legal battle fought, a good fee for admission should be charged for the seats occupied. The plan, an excellent one, might not keep the ladies away; they regard it better than a play on the stage. There the actors mimic life and its follies. In the court room the unwinding of folly's skein is often too horribly real. Those who are not obliged to go to court could find more pleasure in visiting friends, enjoying the sunshine of the parks and streets.

If they are of a turn of mind which prompts them to alleviate woes, they would find a vast field of opportunity in visiting settlement homes, where poor and needy are helped. At a moment to spare, are bending over wastebats and keeping an eye, as best they can, upon their brood of little ones, who cling to their skirts or play about the floor. How much more good it would be, for those women of leisure, to take out the little ones for an hour's airing than to ponder to idle curiosity, sitting in a stuffy court room, where the speaker never has any business, and returning home tired and jaded and often peevish. Viewing morbid scenes means neglect of home and becomes a fixed habit, from which they find it difficult to break away. Let the women spend their leisure time amidst bright and cheery surroundings that their husbands and children will be glad to see them return home, and have no discomfited homes.

A CORNER FOR COOKS

SOME EGG DISHES.

Egg With Tomato Sauce. Boil the required number of eggs for eight minutes, plunge in cold water for a minute, remove, shell them, then cut in halves lengthwise. Reduce half a pint of tomato sauce in a saucepan to about a gill, add eggs to sauce with one-half teaspoonful of pepper. Mix well, cook for five minutes, transfer them into a deep dish and serve. This is for twelve eggs.

Fricassee Eggs. Fry a half teaspoonful of minced onion in a tablespoonful of butter in your frying pan. Stir into this a tablespoonful of flour and pour upon it a cup of soup stock of gravy. Stir until this blends with the butter and flour in a smooth sauce. Have ready three or four eggs, which you have previously boiled hard, and cut into quarters or into thick slices. Lay them in the gravy until they are heated, sprinkle with pepper, salt and serve with or without toast or crackers.

Eggs Poached in Milk. Heat a cup of milk in the chafing dish over hot water, and when it is scalding slip eggs into it as directed in the foregoing recipe, breaking each egg into a saucer. Beat the eggs with hot milk and cook until the whites are set. Take them out carefully and lay on slices of hot buttered toast. This may be moistened with a little hot milk in which the eggs were cooked. An added touch of savoriness is given to this dish by spreading each piece of toast lightly with anchovy paste. When this is done use no salt on the eggs.

Ham Omelet. One and one-half tablespoonful of butter, one and one-half tablespoonful of milk, one-third teaspoon salt, pepper, three-quarters of a cup of milk, three eggs, one-fourth cupful minced ham.

Make a cream sauce of butter, four salt, pepper and milk, mix with it the minced ham left from breakfast and when cool add the well beaten whites and cook in a hot frying pan until brown on the bottom, then dry the top in a hot oven, fold and serve at once like a plain omelet.

Curried Eggs. Fry a little sliced onion in a tablespoonful of butter. Stir into this a tablespoonful of flour and one teaspoonful of curry powder, or the latter in quantity to taste. When well blended, pour in one cup of hot water in which a bouillon cube has been dissolved (these cost five cents for twenty and are sold in a tin). Boil and thicken. Next lay in four hard-boiled eggs cut into quarters or slices. Season with pepper and salt. When the eggs are heated through the dish is ready to serve.

Interesting Connections Of "The Rosary's" Author

Florence Barclay, author of "The Rosary" and "The Broken Halo," belongs to the Charlesworth family, a family that has served the Church in an unbroken chain since the days of Elizabeth. Morley Adams recently said: "Mrs. Barclay's books probably bear the same gospel that her forebears preached, only her congregation is the world."

Mrs. Barclay is the granddaughter of the Rev. Charlesworth, whose "Mysteries of Childhood" was read with such avidity when it appeared half a century ago. She is a niece of the learned Arabic scholar Prof. Cowell, to whose persuasion it was due that Fitzgerald took up the study of Arabic. Prof. Cowell rendered valuable assistance in connection with the translation of Omar Khayyam. Mrs. Barclay's sister is Mary, Edington Booth, who is the author of several books for young people.

Much of Mrs. Barclay's writing has been done at Hereford. Here, of which her husband, the Rev. Charles Barclay, is the vicar. With its charming garden, fragrant with the season's bloom and musical with the song of birds, the vicarage is just the kind of environment that the writer associates with the production of books such as "The Rosary" and "The Broken Halo." One book from the pen of Mrs. Barclay, "The Flower of the Pasture Gate," whose garden setting carries one back to the charming homesteads embowered in green of the English countryside, was, however, strangely enough, written when the author was on shipboard crossing the Atlantic. "The Following of the Star" was partly written at the Villa Trovasca, in Florence, where George Eliot wrote "Romola" and where Mrs. Browning, Maxwell Gray and Lord Lytton often stayed. This spot is still one beloved by authors and composers, for among the present generation of writers it has been used by Frances Hodgson Burnett, Thomas Hardy and Eton Phillips.

TO-DAY'S-POEM

THE EAGLE'S LOVE.

The eagle sat upon the rocky verge; He sat and sang—the wild notes filled the air. He saw the maiden in the vale below; He marked how beautiful she was, how fair.

"Good girl, thou maiden like the rain-deer's feet! How sad it is thou hast not learned to fly! In silence in that place of shadow deep, Thou like a flower wilt fade away and die."

"O lovely maid, if thou couldst only fly! Queen would I make thee of my rocky steep; And if thine eyes grey heavy, on my wings I with sweet songs would cradle thee to sleep."

"Those eyes of thine to me are dark-eyes night, They smile a burning sun, like that above. The heaven vast would not rise over thee, But would become thy vassal, for thy love."

"I wonder if thou canst not fly at all? Who gave thee birth, devoid of wings for flight? I wonder if thou never in thy life Hast longed to soar in air, all free and light?"

Thus the proud eagle from the rocky verge Sang, longing for the maiden for his mate. He flew away, and passed o'er hills and vales, Mourning and grieving for the maiden's fate.

VERY DAY ETIQUETTE

"I and my cousin go with two very nice young men, who enjoy playing kissing games. Should we allow them to? How many times should we let them kiss? We go to the theatre three times a week. Is that right? asked Mollie.

"Do not allow kissing games and do not allow boys to kiss you at any time. You are decidedly too young to be going to theatres three times a week. Once a week is often enough to receive men callers at your age," answered her aunt.

BIRD CENSUS OF U. S. NOW READY FOR TABULATOR!

Washington, July 8. — Officials of the Biological Survey in the Department of Agriculture hope soon to be able to announce the most accurate count ever made of the birds in the United States.

Returns from some of the hundreds of nature-lovers around the country who have enlisted as volunteer enumerators have been coming in, reflecting an enthusiastic interest in the count.

When the census was declared open about 250 bird enthusiasts in all sections of the country who previously had rendered valuable service were asked to supply the desired information, and in addition to these several hundred others volunteered their aid.

The counting has been going on since June 3, and was to have closed up by July 1, but it probably will be some time before the last of the returns are in and announcement is made of the total bird population.

The census will not include the species known as game birds, but in all other respects it will be as thorough and as well classified as is practicable. Previous estimates by the big experts are that there are 120 million species of birds in the United States and Canada, the varieties being more generously distributed in the eastern states than in the west and the least of all in the prairie.

But this is only a guess. The enumerators in the present count have been assigned typical tracts of wooded land, cultivated land and pasture and asked to count the birds on each. Officials of each state will be asked to furnish the Department of Agriculture with information showing the total number of birds in each kind of land within the borders of the state and the number of birds in each state then will be fairly accurately compared.

The plan adopted by many of the observers is to zigzag back and forth across the chosen area. At daylight, counting the male birds of each species as they appear in the air at that season, each in full song and easily seen. After the migration period is over and the birds are settled in their quarters it is safe to estimate that each male represents a breeding pair. One of the main objects of the census, by the way, is to determine how many pairs of birds of each species breed within definite areas.

A count taken in a part of Chevy Chase, a suburb of Washington, shows that in one quarter of a square tract of twenty-three acres the total number of breeding pairs being 119, about seven to an acre. The average is stated to show one pair to an acre. The tract in question is thickly populated, the bird experts of the government see in this report a refutation of the theory that the presence of many people tends to decrease the number of birds.

LABORER CRUSHED TO DEATH BY MACHINE

John H. Garner, 272 Noble avenue, a negro laborer employed by the Singer Manufacturing Co. was killed in a coal crusher yesterday afternoon. When his left foot was caught in the coal he was attempting to push into the mouth of the crusher. Before the machine could be stopped and the foot extricated, his foot, instead of being ground to pieces, he died before he could be hurried to the hospital.

He is said to have a wife and two sisters residing in Providence, R. I. Permission was given by Medical Examiner Garlick to remove the body to the morgue.

LADIES' BOLERO COSTUME

The home dressmaker should, by all means, attempt one of the smart little bolero jackets now so fashionable. The one shown here accompanies a skirt of rag-top design, and the entire costume is carried out in light summer serge, trimmed with a collar and vest of white pique. Three and one-half yards of such material are required to make the dress, with a yard of 38-inch linen for the vest and collar.

All of the various parts of the pattern may be cut from a fold of the goods, the illy collar and back being placed on a lengthwise fold, the others on a lengthwise thread. If the Japanese collar is to be used instead, the neck should be cut out at the front and back on double "notch" perforations. In making the under-arm and shoulder seams are closed, after the darts in front have been taken up. The jacket is now fitted.

Close seam of illy collar as notched; bone along seam. Turn under edge on slot perforations. Adjust to position as illustrated, center-backs even; tack back edge underneath front of bolero and close, meeting front edges (indicating cutting guide).

closed by double "notch" perforations, or roll back from lower edge as illustrated. For the two seam sleeves close seams as notched, easing fullness between notches at elbow. Gather upper edge between double "notch" perforations. Close cuff seam as notched, sew to sleeve inside seam at notch in front. Finish with a half of taffeta or wear one of the little ready-made waste belts with pockets at each side.

YOUR BOYS AND GIRLS

Coloring pictures are the most interesting things you could give a sick child to do during convalescence. Magazine pictures are excellent for coloring especially the fashion figures.

Home-made "jig-saw" puzzles are made by pasting colored pictures on cardboard and then cutting the same into pieces. These much more good are mixed up in a box, and then patched together again to form the original picture.

There are only a few suggestions for the little youthful invalid, but there are many others which the child's ingenuity will invent with the aid of paper, pencil, crayon and scissors.

BIRTHDAY OF YALE'S FOUNDER

The first benefactor of what is now Yale University was Ellhu Yale, who was born in Boston in 1648 and who died in London 193 years ago today, July 8, 1721. Yale was buried at Wrexham, a little town in North Wales, and his grave is a place of pilgrimage for all "sons of old Eli" who visit England.

Yale's first benefaction was a fortune in the East Indies as a trader, and when he returned to America he gave to the Collegiate School at Saybrook, Conn., books and money valued at $4,000. New Haven will celebrate two years hence the 200th anniversary of the removal of the school to that city. In 1718 it was decided to change the name of the institution to Yale College, in honor of the philanthropist. The name Yale College applied at first only to the new building in New Haven and it was not formally given to the institution until the charter of 1745. In 1887 the use of the title Yale University was authorized.

Yale's gift, small as it seems to-day, was considered munificent when it was given. Few other men in history have bought immortality at so low a price as did Ellhu Yale.

MID-JULY BRIDE IS SHOWERED BY FRIENDS

Miss Mary Hunt gave a pretty "bride party" last evening at her home, 42 Cottage street, in honor of Miss Grace N. Larson who is to wed Henry Chandler Higgins of New Haven on Wednesday, July 15.

At the conclusion of the card playing, the guests were escorted to the dining room where a dainty party scheme of pink and white was most effectively carried out by the use of quantities of Dorothy Perkins roses.

The place cards, tiny trunks and traveling bags necessary for a long journey, were unusual and appropriate as Miss Larson is to go to California after her wedding.

When the bride-elect was about to be seated she found her chair piled high with packages of various shapes which, when they were opened proved to be handsome pieces of silver, cut glass, china, linen and so forth which were friendship tokens from the girls showered about the table.

The prize winners at the bridge party were: Mrs. J. W. Folger, Mrs. Mary Downs, and the Misses Jennie Donning, May Light, Edith Bibbins, Grace Larson, Grace N. Larson, and Margaret Fitzsimmons.
