The Beer Riots at Frankfort.

Of the beer riots at Frankfort, already noticed by the cable dispatches which have appeared in these columns, the correspondent of the London Times writes, under date of April 23:

"The beer riots at Frankfort are very serious. The brewers having slightly raised the price of beer, the mob availed themselves of a market day, when thousands of laborers from the neighborhood visited the town, to attack and demolish the principal beer-houses, taverns and breweries. The police at first hesitated to interfere, but upon some socialists displaying red flags, they thought it high time to assert the majesty of the law, and made an effort to withstand the rioters in the more exposed localities.
They were beaten off by the mob, who, encouraged by success, received the military, now summoned to the spot, with a savor of Berlin. When a few blank cartridges fired to warn off the rioters had proved ineffective, the officers in command at last resorted to more stringent means, and of course easily succeeded in quelling the riot.
The loss of life is very great. There were thirty-seven killed and about one hundred wounded. With the exception of a few, where the rioters were received with scolding and steam being turned on them, they fired to warn off the rioters had proved in-
effective, the officers in command at last
