It was a small frame-house this time, partly surrounded by a wind-break of hearts and honors with women, but not partly surrounded by a wind-break of poplar trees. The bouse was old and weather-beaten. The windows were eovered with frost, the path to the gate was hidden by drifts, and the only living thing to be seen was a poor old horse standing on the lee-side of a hedge. His ribs could be traced clear from the road, and he greeted the borses with a neigh, telling of hunger and ionesomeness.

They went right agin the drefful storm, determined to reach the red farmhouse. Right ahead here, just balf way between the houses, is where we found between the houses, is where we for con. The storm raged for three days, and in some places the drifts were ten feet high. When it cleared away, the gal was missed, Luke was missed, and a gaug of us set out to search the read. We found the horse dead and stiff, and then we knew it was all up with the children. We had an awful time diggin' through these drifts and tracki the pair, and just under this hill here is whar we found'em !?
