To Tell the Age of a Horse

By J. H. WILSON.

There is a great deal of talk about the age of a horse, and many a man has been known to buy a horse of a certain age, only to find that he is much older than he was supposed to be.

The best way to tell the age of a horse is by examining his teeth.

When a horse is young, his teeth are small and sharp.

As he grows older, his teeth become larger and flatter.

By examining the teeth of a horse, a man can tell his age to within a few years.

This is a very important thing to know, especially when buying a horse.

It is a pity that so many men do not know how to tell the age of a horse.

They buy a horse of a certain age, only to find that he is much older than he was supposed to be.

This is a great loss to them, and it is a pity that so many men do not know how to tell the age of a horse.

CLUBS FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

Chairman Brice Issues a Letter Preliminary to the Contest.

Senator Calvin S. Brice, Chairman of the National Democratic Committee, has written a letter of warning and advice to his fellow members of the National Committee.

He begins with a statement that the Republican contest is near at hand, and that the Democrats cannot be too swift in arranging to meet them.

The plan of campaign of the Republicans, he says, is a colossal system of clubs, to be maintained and supported by unlimited means drawn from the pockets of beneficiaries of a monopoly policy.

Mr. Brice says he has examined the plan of organization now in progress of successful accomplishment by the National Association of Democratic Clubs, and he feels it to be the duty of every member of the National Executive Committee to give the club association his most hearty support, and he urges each member of the National Committee to cooperate with the association to the fullest extent.

An important correspondent in the several States. This now requires urgent attention in your State. I would, therefore, ask you to confer with the Chairman of your State Committee as soon as may be convenient and arrange this particular part of your plan; also that you will do all in your power to facilitate the organization in either way that you may think best.

The National officers or the National Association of Democratic Clubs are highly gratified with the recognition accorded it by Chairman Brice. Heretofore there has occasionally been some misunderstanding between the association and various State Committees. This difference is now explained away, and there is every indication of harmonious cooperation.

This system he says can only be met by an equally extensive one of voluntary Democratic clubs—that is, associations of people in their several neighborhoods for the defense of their rights and interests against those who are banded against them.

Mr. Brice says that the truly Democratic clubs have ever been a friend of liberty. He thinks that the approaching struggle is to be one mainly between clubs, and it is greatly to be desired that a uniform and perfected system of Democratic societies, thoroughly organized and in intimate association with each other, shall be established before the beginning of next year.

Lawrence Gardner, Secretary of the National Association of Clubs, is very much pleased with the position taken by Mr. Brice. He has also received good news from New York.

"The outlook is especially encouraging," said he, "and despite the fact that the spirit of Democracy is more than able to overcome their opposition."

THE PEDICULUS GAME.

An Exciting Gambling Sport.

An ex-army chaplain tells of his experience in endeavoring to stop gambling in his regiment that shows how impossible it is to quench the spirit of hazard that takes possession of men when left with nothing to do to keep them busy or furnish excitement.

After a great deal of exhorting he succeeded in gathering in all the cards in camp, and thought he had gambling at a disadvantage; but the next day being pay day, he was attracted by a crowd of men sitting around a blanket spread on the ground. On the blanket were piled two hums of sugar and a great heap of money. The men were gambling, the stakes going to the owner of the lump of sugar upon which the first fly should alight. He at once went to his tent and returned with the cards, which he handed over to the gamblers with sorrow.

This is a pretty good gambling story, but it does not compare with the gambling experiences of the boys who fought Indians in Oregon in the early days. They had neither cards nor money in that dreary Indian country east of the mountains, but they gambled all the same. Tobacco, so highly prized as long as it lasted, served for money. It was cut up into little shanks and used as stakes in the Pediculus game, though the boys were not quite so scientific in the title they gave it. A smooth stone was heated and placed on the ground. Then each man, after entering his chunk of tobacco, would secure a pediculus humanus and hold him two inches above the center of the stone. At the word each man would drop his entry for the race upon the stone, and the one whose entry got off the hot stone first took the pot. You can hear the
