

THINKS CHURCHES ERR.

Practical Christian Finds Why Laboring Men Prefer the Saloon on Sunday. Rev. George L. McNeill, of Indianapolis, the young Presbyterian divine who is studying the conditions of the laboring classes by going incognito into factories and working side by side with them, has written a letter on the subject of his experiences, in which he fully reasons why working men go to saloons. He says he was at Elwood some time ago, and a brother minister asked him the question. Upon inquiry he found that the churches of that city were holding out none but the conventional inducements for laboring people to attend religious services, there being no Young Men's Christian Association and no institutional work of any character in that place.

He at once started out to find a reason why the Elwood laboring men went to saloons and not to church, though they had to sneak into the former through back doors on Sunday, and he quickly came to the conclusion that the saloons were doing some things that the church would do, might tend to at least divide the attendance between the two. He refers to the sociability and fellowship which the laboring men find in such places, and says that, after investigations in many cities and towns, he has come to the conclusion that the reason they congregate there is as follows:

"With rare devotion, the saloon says to the working man and the young man, 'Where thou goest, I will go.' At the mouth of the mines, at the door of the factory, or with the flag in the Philippines, there is the saloon. 'The saloon is every man's club, always open. The warning sign of the public library, 'silence,' is necessary, but fatal. Where shall workmen go to tired to read, go to talk and joke? The saloon is handy, comfortable and cordial, though coarse. The saloon ministers to human nature and natural hunger by providing music and games. While the great church organ, costing thousands is eloquently and pathetically mute, the harp, the violin, the piano and the voice are in the service of the saloon, daily and hourly, gratifying men's hunger for the mysterious harmony of music and the 'meaning of the song that goes deep.' Meanwhile the parson, preaching to pews empty of hands that toil, wonders why it is that workmen go to saloons."

THE KNOWING PAPA.

"There, there, there!" exclaimed the wife of the realistic novelist, as she rushed into her husband's study and picked up her howling offspring. "Did muzzie's precious little lamb think she had deserted him?"

After she had quieted him she turned to her husband and asked: "Did you have a terrible time with Willie while I was out?"

"Oh no," replied the author with a glad smile. "I was very much interested. I had never before made a study of how a baby cries, and I have secured some very interesting notes. I have discovered just how a baby cries when lonely. A few minutes after you went out he began to whine softly to himself, and to wander about as if searching for some one. Then he let out a yell. When I spoke to him and asked him what was the matter he drew down the corners of his mouth and began to cry in earnest. The sounds he made were all variations of the vowels, altogether devoid of consonants."

"His method of crying is to utter from four to seven sharp, barking sounds, then draw a quick, deep breath and yell at the top of his voice with his mouth almost perfectly round. From time to time he varied this performance by holding his breath as if choking, and when he did, not only his face, but even his scalp got red."

"And you sat there and took notes, you brute. I'll never leave our darling with such a cold-blooded man again."

As she said this she gathered up the pet of the household and flounced from the room in a huff.

The realistic novelist took a couple of turns about the room, smiling softly to himself in the meantime, and then stopped before a mirror and winked at himself in a way that suggested that perhaps after all he had simply been doing a clever little romancing that would save him from being left in charge of the baby in future.

HELD BY THE INDIANS.

A Tale of a Boy Rescued from a North Coast Island. A strange tale of kidnapping and detention by Indians was brought to Vancouver, B. C., from the Northern Coast recently by the sloop Roma, which also carried the victim of this enforced residence. James Norman Ellinwood, who says he formerly lived in San Francisco, is the name of the siwash's prisoner. The captain of the Roma found the lad among the Indians on New Princess Royal Island and rescued him. Young Ellinwood was in rags, but the Indians wanted to keep him, and threatened to shoot his rescuers.

Ellinwood's story is that he went to Hartley Bay as clerk in a general store kept by a half-breed named Robertson. While at Hartley Bay he was kidnapped and taken to New Princess Royal Island, where he says he was carefully watched, but was otherwise treated as well as any young Indian in the village. The siwash desired Ellinwood to become one of themselves, quartered him in the rancherie and picked out a young squaw as his future wife. The appearance of the Roma offered him the first opportunity to escape, which he eagerly embraced.

THREE ANIMALS PERSPIRE.

Men, Monkeys and Horses Enjoy the Almost Exclusive Function.

Perspiration is almost peculiar to men, monkeys and horses. Horses sweat all over the body and so do human beings, but monkeys, it is said, sweat only on the head, feet and face. The use of perspiration is mainly to cool the body in its evaporation, although it is generally believed that waste materials are also excreted through the sweat glands when the action of the kidneys is interfered with. In animals that perspire but little, the cooling of the body is effected by evaporation from the lungs, as we see in the case of a panting dog. The amount of perspiration varies greatly, according to the temperature of the surrounding air, the condition of health, the degree of exercise taken, the amount of fluids imbibed, etc. The average amount of perspiration is thought to be about two pints a day, but this is, of course, much increased in hot weather.

In damp weather evaporation from the skin is lessened, and so one seems to perspire more profusely than in dry weather, but this is only apparent, for really transpiration is lessened when the atmosphere is charged with moisture.

Hyperhidrosis is the medical term used to denote an abnormal increase in perspiration. This increase may be general from the entire body, or confined to some particular part, as the face, the hands or the feet. Profuse sweating is very common in cases of debility and in excessively stout persons. It occurs also in connection with various diseases, such as consumption (night sweats), pneumonia, inflammatory rheumatism and certain nervous disorders. Sudden emotion may cause increased perspiration.

The opposite condition, a great diminution or absence of sweating (anhidrosis), is much rarer, and occurs usually in connection with some disease of the skin. Sometimes the character of the secretion is changed, and cases of black, blue, gray, yellow or red sweating have been described.

The treatment of profuse perspiration depends upon the cause. Tonics, cold or cold bathing, especially salt bathing, temperate exercise and rubbing of the skin are useful in cases dependent upon general debility or obesity. Spraying or sponging the body with brandy and water, vinegar and water, or a solution of tannin or boric acid is useful.

Certain drugs which have a tendency to diminish perspiration are sometimes employed when it is so excessive as to weaken the already debilitated patient and to prevent much needed sleep.

SHOWED HOW IT WAS DONE.

Athletic Wife Gives Husband Points on Prize Fights.

It was very late when he got home. He knew it perfectly well and he governed his actions accordingly. But she was there, waiting for him when he came in with his shoes in his hands. She was sitting in the parlor and she smiled sweetly. He thought this looked hopeful.

"What kept you, dear?" she asked. "I—I was waiting for returns from the prize fight," he said, weakly.

"Oh, was there a fight last night?" she asked with interest.

"Oh, yes," he said, thinking to change the original current of the conversation, "Sharkey and Ruhlin."

"And who won?" asked the light of his life.

"Ruhlin knocked Sharkey out," he responded brightly.

"Oh, how nice," she cried. "How did he do it?"

"With a blow on the jaw," said her spouse, rather surprised.

"Show me," she said, "I'm interested," and she arose and put up her hands. He backed away a little.

"Like this?" she asked, leading with her left and feinting with her right. She landed heavily on his solar plexus.

"No," he gasped, "not quite."

"Maybe this is it?" she ventured, bringing a half-hook under his ear.

"Or was this it?" she queried, leading with a straight left on the point of the jaw. He did not answer. He went down and took the full count and then she lifted him and put him into his little bed.

"The athletic woman," she murmured, "may not be an ideal housewife, but she knows a thing or two."

ation will now give women an opportunity to study chemistry and pass examinations. In commenting on this privilege, Dr. W. Wachter in a Berlin review says: "If women do secure this privilege it will be anything but a sinecure. German apothecaries' clerks have to undergo a very severe course of study, and, when they receive a position, they are expected to be on duty from 7 to 8 in the morning to 10 to 11 at night, besides attending to the night bell every other night if not every night. For all this they receive from $15 to $18 a month, with board and lodging. In a few exceptional cases an assistant may receive as much as $50 a month. Under such circumstances it is hardly a wonder that the young men do not crowd into this field of employment. It is, indeed, the difficulty of getting assistants, especially in villages, that has made many of the apothecaries willing to consider the candidacy of women. Women clerks, he insists, should under no circumstances accept lower wages than the men, and they should, if possible, organize for protection; nor should they ever consent to act, when business is slack, as assistants to the apothecary's wife, thus enabling her to dispense with a servant."

In the "good old days" a man's care for his health was marked by the completeness of the armor in which he locked himself up. It was very unhealthy in those "merry days" of jovial rober robes, to be outside of the steel case of knight hood. It was steel every hour of the day, and every time a man needs to be armed inside rather than out. The gentle germ is to love in that he laughs at locksmiths. You can't lock him out, but you can make it so mighty uncomfortable for him that he'll be glad to get out and seek some other lodging.

The greatest protection against disease is a healthy condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Health is the true armor against the germ. The health of the stomach and allied organs is assured to those who use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It purifies the blood, strengthens the stomach, nourishes the nerves and gives new life to the lungs.

There is no alcohol or other intoxicant contained in "Golden Medical Discovery."

I used ten bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and several vials of his Pleasant Pellets a year ago this spring, and have had no trouble with indigestion since. Robert W. Thompson, of Townsend, Broadwater Co., Montana. "Words fail to tell how thankful I am for the relief, as I had suffered so much and it seemed that the doctors could do me no good. I was down in weight to 100 pounds and unable to work at all. Now I weigh nearly 200 and do my day's work on the farm."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure biliousness.
