More Horsepower per Dollar Than Any Other Engine!

That is what the "Associated" or "Mule Team" engine gives, because it has LARGER BORE AND STROKE AND HEAVIER FLY WHEELS, and ITS CYLINDERS ARE MADE OF SEMI-STEEL AND ARE CAST SEPARATELY, insuring even expansion and consequently more power and longer life.

AND YOU CAN OPERATE THEM WITH EITHER GASOLINE OR DISTILLATE.

Our 6 h. p. engine has a 6-inch bore, 10-inch stroke and its fly wheels are 40 inches in diameter and weigh 250 pounds each. Compare it with any other engine of the same rated horsepower and you will see the point.

A full line of these engines is on display at my store—I want you to examine them before you buy. They are backed by the strong "John Deere" guarantee as well as my own—they're the best you can get.

RUSSIAN REVOLUTION HASTENS WAR'S END

WHOLE STRENGTH OF NATION NOW WILL BE GIVEN TO ALLIES.

In spite of the fact that the position of the United States today in the international situation is far more critical than it has ever been, the belief is widespread among army officers and government officials in the national capital that the successful revolution in Russia will materially hasten the end of the war.

They believe that with the revolution a success, Germany disappointed in her "ruthless" submarine campaign and finding her Russian props suddenly taken away, will speedily be found facing such a condition of affairs at home as will demand that she make peace, or follow the lead Russia has just set. And she may follow it whether war ends or not, say the experts.

War Promises Emancipation.

In other words, it is pointed out, a war begun by autocracy to sustain autocracy, and welding fetters upon the people of Europe, is now promising to be an emancipation. No more terrible tragedy to humanity could be imagined, government officials say, than a war which numbers its victims by the millions and leaves no compensating benefits to mankind. It is now realized that at the end of the conflict there will be momentous conclusions that must transcend the terms of any possible treaty of peace.

There is hardly a doubt in the minds of American officials that the greatest crisis of the war has been passed, if the Russian government, as now assured, has definitely been snatched from the hands of Germany by the Russian people. The liberation of Russia from the rule of the bureaucrats and pro-Germans would make the case against Germany clean-cut, according to official opinion. It will be Germany's turn next, according to the same opinion.

Germany now remains the only aristocratic nation of the first magnitude in the world. Officials of the United States government are at last beginning to understand something of what has been behind the cry of the Allies that Prussianism must be crushed.

Reforms in Germany.

The recent speech of the German chancellor, as interpreted in the light of what Russia is accomplishing, is now seen to have been an utterance of the greatest significance. To begin with, it was made several days before the news of the Russian coup had reached the German people. It is believed in Washington that Germany had wind of the Russian revolution through her agents, and that the chancellor did not dare let the Russian news reach Germany before he had promised reforms to the German people.

It may be many days before the Russians themselves know whether they are able to retain the power they have suddenly taken. So far as opinions are ventured in the national capital, however, they are to the effect that the revolution already has all the earmarks of success and that only the grossest mismanagement can bring failure.

Change Is Illustrated.

The single fact that Paul Milukoff is the new Russian foreign minister is said to illustrate the great change that the revolution already has made in the effectiveness of all the Allies' campaign. Russia was one of the Allies, and as such had to be consulted, but was consulted always with the sickening fear that the confidence reposed in her would immediately be betrayed to the Germans. Plans of campaign were made, but always with the disheartening convictions that at any moment, through treachery, the Russian armies would fail to do their part.

Germany openly exalted in the fact. But now, in the twinkling of an eye, all this is changed. Assuming the revolution is to make good, the control of Russian affairs, for the present, at least, is in the hands of patriots, of whose integrity the whole world is convinced. The man with whom the foreign ministers at Paris, London and Rome are now to exchange confidences is Milukoff, widely known as a historian, editor, and as a most determined fighter for Russian progress. He was the founder, and has ever been the leader, of the most progressive block in the duma, the Cadet party. He is esteemed in the entente countries, and is said to understand Russian foreign affairs, particularly that part of them having to do with the Allies, better than any other man in Russian public life.

Almost New Nation.

The revolution, it is pointed out, promises to make a change almost equivalent to bringing a new nation into the camp of the Allies, for the forces in control have hitherto prevented the full strength of Russia from being brought into play. Armies have disappeared at the moment they were to play their part, have been left without munitions at the moment of German attack, or have been sentenced to inactivity as a campaign was about to begin.

It is believed by American military men that under the duma the aim will be to bring all of Russia's strength into play. It will take time to organize and coordinate for the fullest effectiveness, but it will take no time to begin the operations which the generals at the front for many months have been ready to institute, and from which they have been held back by secret and open traitors at Petrograd.

And so it is believed that while the effect of a successful revolution on Russia herself will be incalculable, its effect on the prosecution of the war by the Allies will merit the same word.

Revolution Averts Disaster.

Army men believe the revolution came just in time to avert a great military disaster. Students of the situation on the various European fronts, led to the recent conclusion by experts of the general staff, believed that the next German blow would be struck either against Russia or Italy, and probably both. It seemed almost certain that Russia would be attacked, because the Russian supplies have been retarded and because the intrigues in high circles made it likely that the resistance would not be whole-hearted.

This drive against Russia was to force separate peace, American army experts believe. Russia was to be promised restitution of much captured territory, perhaps even Constantinople. Germany would then be released from the food blockade and with one enemy less would redouble efforts on the other fronts.

With liberal government in Russia there will come an excellent opportunity to negotiate a new commercial treaty between that country and the United States. The old treaty expired in 1913, and the United States has declined to renew it except on the condition that Russia recognize the passports of all Americans, including those of Jewish and Russian origin.

The state department has been anxious for a new treaty, but the Russian government would not consent to relinquish the right to exclude the Jews.

THREE CREWS START BOTTLING MONDAY.

vener so broken and shaped as to hold the bottles rigid.

After they had designed the box, they hit another snag—they couldn't find a millman who would invest capital in the manufacture of the boxes. They had one proposition after another from millmen, all saying what they would do if somebody else would furnish the machines, and the upshot of it was that the company itself installed the necessary machinery in its local plant.

To Use Wood Exclusively.

Now it is shipping white pine boards of the right size from Bend, Ore., to this city, and re-shipping half of the manufactured boxes to its Salem, Ore., plant more cheaply than it can buy jute fiber containers, and is planning to enter the market with its surplus boxes. Next year the company will use the wooden boxes exclusively.

It is interesting to note, in conclusion, that the company will use 300 carloads of bottles in moving its products during the next six months.

Talks on Gardening.

County Agriculturist C. H. Bergstrom discussed "Gardening" at a meeting of the sixth, seventh and eighth grades of the Roosevelt school Tuesday afternoon, at which the members of the Parent-Teacher circle were guests. A business session was held after the county agent's talk, refreshments were served and an interesting program given.

Commissioners Uphold Goss.

The county commissioners Monday upheld the decision of County Superintendent O. C. Goss refusing to establish a new school district in the Offut lake neighborhood, to be composed of portions of districts 7, 45, 47, 15 and 78.

ORGANIZING STATE MARKETING BUREAU

NEW DEPARTMENT WILL CO-OPERATE WITH FEDERAL AGENCIES.

(From the State College.)

Profitable marketing of his produce is one of the most serious problems confronting the American farmer today. In the Northwest this problem is especially difficult owing to the long distance between larger centers of population and regions of production. The state of Washington ranks high in the quality and quantity of its agricultural product and if adequate markets are available the agricultural prosperity of the state is assured.

Mindful of this situation, the 1917 legislature wisely passed an act creating a state office of farm markets, providing for a director of markets and assistants who shall give their time to the investigation, encouragement, development and improvement of marketing conditions in the state. The bill was formulated and introduced by Senator Ralph Metcalf of Tacoma, one of the foremost students of agricultural economics in the West today.

Senator Metcalf was one of Washington's representatives on the national commission on rural credit and co-operative organization sent to Europe four years ago and he has, during the past two years, made a careful study of marketing departments in the various states of this country, embodying the results of his work in the law recently passed.

The law provides for an investigation of methods of distribution, transportation rates, methods of reducing wastes, costs of marketing, and is designed to assist in every way possible in the improvement of marketing conditions. The maintenance of a market news service is provided for, as is also co-operation with the office of markets, United States department of agriculture, thus bringing to the assistance of the people of the state the full power of the federal and state governments in coping with this important problem.

The law provides for a director of farm marketing appointed by the director of the state experiment station, by and with the approval of the governor. It will, therefore, devolve upon Dr. Ira D. Cardiff, director of the experiment station, to organize the new office of markets and supervise its work. The affiliation of this new office with the experiment station will have the result of closely coordinating the problems of agricultural production with those of distribution and marketing.

The act carries an appropriation of $15,000 for the biennium which, while small as compared to such appropriations in other states, nevertheless will allow the state to make a beginning in this line and effectively co-operate with the federal marketing departments and also local marketing organizations. The act is a piece of wise and constructive legislation which will doubtless have far-reaching consequences in the economic development of the state.

Stevens Must Pay Losier.

General Hazard Stevens, who sued H. B. Losier for $42 and asked that he be permitted to withhold $56 in back pay for damages he claimed had been done by Losier to an auto delivery wagon, will instead have to pay Losier $37, according to a verdict given by a jury in the local superior court Monday. The Tumwater justice court, where the case was originally heard, gave Losier a verdict of $56, the amount of pay due him, but the superior court jury allowed some of General Stevens' claims and reduced the judgment in Losier's favor to $37.
