INTERESTING LEGISLATION

A History of Sen. Dillingham's Fight To Regulate Immigration

There is a bit of very interesting history of a piece of National legislation now pending in Washington that is of more than passing interest to Vermonters generally. For many years the question of placing greater restrictions on foreign immigration has engaged the attention of thoughtful students of public matters everywhere. Bill after bill has been presented to Congress with restrictive measures of various kinds but one after another have failed at the powerful influence of the steamship companies and great foreign societies together with the great industrial corporations, who are more concerned with dividends than they are with the future citizenship of the country, has been brought to bear on the members of congress. Millions of dollars have been freely contributed to defeat any bill that would materially cut down the coming to this country any persons who could raise money enough to buy a steamship ticket or who would work for less wages than the native born American. Of late this condition has become so alarming that the great patriotic organizations of the country have made an organized fight for better conditions.

Four years ago Congress heeded the growing public demand and created the great commission to go about the country and abroad and thoroughly study the entire question. After four years of searching investigation they reported to congress their findings and so great was the question and so careful their work that it required a great bound volume to contain the amount of material that they deemed it wise to submit to congress. This great commission was under the chairmanship of our senior senator, Hon. William P. Dillingham, who directed the work of the commission.

His great skill and with a foresight that has easily made him a high place in the hearts of those who believe that there is no single question of greater importance to the American people.

The report was submitted to congress and with it, The Dillingham Bill, which contained the best thought of the majority of the Commission. It was referred to the senate immigration committee headed by Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, while in the committee it was attacked by every influence possible for, either its adverse report or for the bill featured to be killed in committee and when it should come out of the committee should be as harmless and innocent as a newborn babe. The commission had, with a single dissenting vote recommended that the one most feasible single measure would be a literacy test, a test which has been suggested to come to this country should demonstrate that they could read and write in some language. Senator Dillingham incorporated this most excellent provision into his bill, but when it came to the senate, from the committee, it was stricken out and in general way the bill was of little value.

Then the great organizations of the country got busy and demanded that the literacy test be restored. Legislative agents went to Washington, and under the lead of the country's greatest patriotic fraternity, the National Order of United American Mechanics, a conference of the heads of the order in various states was called to meet in Washington last February. They met and each saw his senators, and impressed upon them the necessity for the restoration of the literacy test to the Dillingham bill. Naturally both Senator Dillingham and Page pledged their hearty support and in a few days Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, a member of the order, secured the adoption of an amendment restoring the literacy test and in April the bill passed the senate with but nine opposing votes. It was sent to the House of representatives, and this body being of the opposing party it was seen that the Dillingham bill in its entirety, could not be passed.

Chairman Burnett (also a member of the Juniors) moved, in committee to strike out of the Dillingham Bill all after the enacting clause and substitute the Burnett bill, which was a simple, clear and ringing provision for the literacy test. After weeks of hearings and the bringing of every possible influence for its defeat, the committee reported it favorably back to the house. But it was in the closing days of the session, the national elections were close at hand and the political influence of the steamship companies and the foreign vote was feared in many close congressional districts. Friends of the measure believed it best to let the whole question lay over until this month. The Rules Committee had promised special rule granting a consideration of the bill early in December.

That there might be no question in the minds of congress as to how far they had gone on the pending question, William H. Jeffrey of East Burke, prepared a joint resolution and had it introduced into the General Assembly by Representative Cook, of Lyndon. It passed both houses and received the signature of Governor Fletcher, and when the great debate of December 14 took place it was used on the floor to good effect by Chairman Burnett.

In November the National Council of the Juniors called a conference of the state councilors to be held in Washington the 13-14 and on the latter date the bill was brought up for general debate of four hours. This was recognized by both public men of Washington and the press as the hottest and scrappiest held for many years, the opposition being led by Congressman Goldfogle of New York, Sabbath and Joe Cannon of Illinois. Wednesday evening State Councilor Jeffrey received from Congressman Plumley a telegram that the bill had passed. It is most gratifying to be able to report that both Congressman Plumley and Greene supported the measure at every point. And there is some pride in the fact that this great triumph, in which so prominent a part will keep out of our country, every year, about 250,000 of the ignorant and about 35 per cent of the undesirable foreigners.
