DEATH OF REV. DR. EDWARD T. FAIRBANKS

St. Johnsbury Mourns the Loss of Its First Citizen

Rev. Dr. Edward T. Fairbanks died at his home Sunday evening at 11 o'clock.

Edward Taylor Fairbanks was born in St. Johnsbury, May 12, 1826, being the elder of the two sons of Joseph Paddock and Almira Taylor Fairbanks. He was of the eighth generation from Jonathan Fairbanks of Yorkshire, Eng., who settled in Dedham, Mass., in 1636. He was educated at St. Johnsbury Academy under Principal James K. Colby and at Phillips-Andover Academy under Dr. Samuel H. Taylor, these two men being generally regarded as the leading educators in New England at that time. He entered Yale College in 1855, was class secretary during some of his college course and for many years later. He was a member of the famous society of Scroll and Key.

Among the members of the class of '59 was his life-long friend, Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Twitshell of Hartford, Conn., who died only last month.

After graduating from Yale he returned to St. Johnsbury where he taught for a year in the Academy and our high school. In the two years following he studied theology at Andover Theological Seminary.

On July 9, 1862, he married at Derry, N. H., Emma Cornelia, daughter of Guy C. and Sally M. Taplin of Montpelier. She was at the time of her marriage a student at Adams Academy at Derry. They straightway sailed for Europe where some two years were spent in studying and visiting most of the European capitals. During the winter of '64 Dr. Fairbanks journeyed in Egypt and Palestine, a trip which included a dramatic ride of some 30 days and which greatly enriched his memory in after years with experiences and reminiscences of his visit to the Holy Land.

He began his ministerial career as pastor of the Congregational church at Chester, where he served one year, and on Jan. 1, 1868, was ordained as pastor of the First Congregational church at St. Johnsbury Center where for six years he lived in the "House of the Five Gables," ministering to the spiritual and temporal wants of the people of that parish. On Jan. 30, 1873, he was installed pastor of the South Congregational church in this village and since that time has resided at "Sheepcote" on Park street. For 28 years he was pastor of the South church, resigning in 1902 to the deep regret and surprise of a united and devoted people. A year ago he was elected pastor emeritus of the church. In 1902 he was elected librarian of the St. Johnsbury Athenaeum, a position for which his scholarship and culture especially fitted him. Since 1882 he has been secretary and treasurer of the Academy and one of its most efficient trustees. He was for many years president of the St. Johnsbury Cemetery Association, served for some time as one of the auditors of E. and T. Fairbanks and Co., was president of the trustees of the Fairbanks Museum and a member of the Sphinx Club.

Almost without his knowledge he was nominated and afterwards elected a member of the State Senate in 1908 and proved a valuable member of that body. In 1903 he was given the degree of D. D. by the University of Vermont.

Few preachers in the country excelled Dr. Fairbanks in the chaste and original style of composition. His sermons and public addresses sparkled with flashes of wit and bore evidence of deep study. In 1902, one of his friends printed a book of his sermons entitled "The Wrought Iron," which has long been out of print, and in 1914, through the auspices of St. John de Crevecoeur chapter, D. A. R., he published the History of St. Johnsbury, one of the most readable and informing town histories ever printed. He was also a frequent contributor to the local press and some of the magazines. As an appreciator of his distinct service to the community in preparing a history without remuneration the townspeople presented him about four years ago with a purse of gold amounting to over $1000.

Dr. Fairbanks' wife died Sept. 6, 1917, and he is survived by one daughter, Cornelia Taylor Fairbanks. The funeral will be held at his home Wednesday forenoon at 11 o'clock. Friends will please omit flowers.

Such is the brief sketch of the first citizen of St. Johnsbury whom all in town, young and old, have loved and revered in the long time that he has been actively interested in our affairs. Few men have given more of their life to the community and he touched life in a variety of ways. As a public speaker none could excel him in vivacity or originality; as a preacher his beautiful language and depth of religious thought had a magnetic influence; as an educator and librarian he brought to his work a love for it that inspired all who came in contact with him; as a citizen he represented the best in citizenship, fearlessly standing for the highest ideals in the community which now mourn his loss.

GERMANY STILL UNREPENTANT

As Indicated By Articles Published Lately In German Papers

WILL PUT AMERICA IN HER PLACE

Germans Still Being Hoodwinked By the Same Old Game Europe Believes

We have got to behave. Germany gives us fair warning that she has put a rod in pickle which on the first convenient occasion she will lay about our backs if we do not mend our manners. Germany admits that there has been a slight accident, and for some unaccountable reason Allied troops are now "keeping the Watch of the Rhine," but if we think that Germany is defeated, we are greatly mistaken. The "undefeated Army" of the Fatherland is bringing back "untarnished escutcheons;" they are told that they have "fought the good fight," that they need never think of the war "in shame," and they are actually being assured that they were "not really defeated," but only obliged to succumb to the "superiority of brute force."

Meanwhile the evident determination of the Allies to pay no heed to German whines for mitigation of the armistice terms is making the healthiest sense and the German people imagine a vain thing, namely, that they will "put us in our place" the very moment they have recovered from this unimportant little incident. It is really astounding to discover to what depths of depravity all the Allied statesmen have sunk, save and except President Wilson. With their curious mental twist for regarding everything they wish to believe as an actual fact, the Huns have got it into their heads that the President has gone over to Europe simply and solely to save them from the wicked oppression of the bullying Allies, who as the Frankfurter Zeitung so sweetly puts it, are indulging in "orgies of military swollen-headedness."

The Frankfort organ—which, by the way, is located perilously near the occupied zone—is oblivious of defeat, and menacingly remarks:

"To imagine that the German nation can remain as treated as it was for two hundred years after the Thirty Years' War is to labor under a terrible delusion. If Germany is forced to the realization that her ruin was deliberately contemplated and that the armistice and peace are to bring her nothing better than downfall—which she could have accepted honorably if she had dared to allow her unbent armies in France and Belgium to continue fighting—then there is nothing good in sight for Europe or for civilized mankind. It is high time that on all sides the orgies of military swollen-headedness should come to an end and that common sense, humanity, and justice should come into their own. It is time that ways and means should be taken to insure peace before the last germ of international reconciliation is destroyed."

Our old friend, the fire-eating Count Ernst zu Reventlow, through an unwonted medium, the Berlin Vortwart thinks that Germany might as well renew the war. He asks:

"Are there not plenty of men in the returning armies who are eager to participate in the national defense? The Workers' and Soldiers' Councils have now an opportunity to render immediate service to the Fatherland. If they have the courage to decide for action, support will not fail them. Clemenceau finds himself in agreement with those official plotters in London who assert that a lasting peace is possible only if Germany is forever unable to rise from the dust. 'It is the robber, the man with the evil conscience, who despoils a defenseless victim. England and France have the desire to invade every part of our country, and thereby to create a condition of universal ruin. The Entente desires to see the Workers' and Soldiers' Councils dissolved, and it can not be denied that were this desire gratified, the enemy Powers would step in and act with the utmost severity and ruthlessness.'"

Theodore Wolff, the editor of the Berliner Tageblatt, plays upon the same string, but in rather more dialect tones:

"We rely on President Wilson to stand fast to his program, and we are counting on real peace negotiations, not a dictated peace. We will demand that the question of Alsace-Lorraine be decided by a vote of the people. We will also demand the independence of the eastern provinces of Germany and of German Austria."

"We count upon the Entente not to lay new economic burdens upon us, for that will lead to further hatred, and if the Entente attempts to say that Germany—now humble—is powerless, it will reckon falsely, for sixty million people can not indefinitely lie down before such threats."

The pathetic faith that the Huns possess in the supposed friendship of America received a rude jar at our last elections, but they think there is still time for the President to come to their aid. The Berlin Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung implores him to get busy and have the peace terms all fixed up before March 4:

"In view of America's sacrifices in blood and money, we may well believe that in order to prevent fresh war the President is still serious about his scheme to conclude a peace based upon a league of nations. But his position in the council of the Allies and his influence have altered considerably since his speech on September 27. Even the French, justifying revenge, did not then think it possible that the collapse of Germany would be so speedy and so complete. The intoxication of victory, which is only now on its beginnings, will go on increasing, and there will be an everlessening disposition to listen to Wilson's strivings for moderation and to follow the line of his ideals. If the new American congress appears on the scene with its anti-German majority, it might well turn out that the German people could no longer reckon upon the carrying out of the principles which in the peace offer of November 5 they accepted as the foundation of a just peace."

The Kolische Zeitung calls for the immediate summoning of a German national assembly in order to strengthen the President's hand, and it is terrified at the prospect of Congressional influence being felt at the peace table:

"It is very much to our interest to get things clear with Wilson while he is still able to make his word prevail with the other Allies. This will not be the case for very long, because he has to reckon at home with a strong counter-current. The Republicans, who at the recent elections conquered both Houses of Congress, are furious opponents of Wilson's 'fourteen points.' At the moment their sharper tongues can find expression only in the press, because they do not come into power until March 4 next. But when once they have taken control it will be much more difficult for us than it is now to put through the Wilson principles. Wilson himself will see his arm paralyzed, but we alone will have to bear the bad effects."

"The only possible conclusion for us to draw from this state of things is that we should garner the peace harvest while the political weather is still to some extent favorable for us. In other words, we must pave the way as quickly as possible for the commencement of peace negotiations, and this can be done only if we establish a government which will express the will of the whole people, and not be suspected as merely the representative of a tiny group of Bolshevik would-be dictators—and therefore would not be admitted to the negotiation table at all."

This sort of argument would indicate that the "good old German spirit" is not yet dead, and that the gentle Hun will still bear a lot of watching.
