Ringling Hogs.

R. N. Penitentiary writes: I see in the report of the proceedings of the Farmers Club, that they recommended ringling hogs to prevent their rooting. Please tell me the method you would adopt. About five weeks ago I turned seven shoats and pigs on a good piece of soil. I procured from a tinner about a yard of wire about the size of a knitting-needle, and cut it into pieces about four inches long. I took an awl and made a hole through the snout and in the wire through, bent it round a small iron rod so as to make a ring about an inch in diameter; twisted the ends and filed them off. They have all gotten the rings out but one. They managed to work them through the gristle, in several cases tearing them out, and now are rooting as much as ever. What kind of rings do you use? Are there rings made especially for this purpose, and if so, where can they be gotten?

F. D. Curtis—The rings of our correspondent are just large enough to clear the edge of the hog's snout, and no larger, or they will catch fast and tear out the snout. Small wire will cut through the gristle much sooner and easier than larger. Another thing, the twist of the ring must not be long, or it will catch fast and hinder the pig from eating. A better material than wire is to have a blacksmith make the rings out of railroad iron, with a hole through the end and the other pointed to pass through it and fasten with a twist. The iron should be flattened and cut through the snout with the flat side across. This sort of ring will not tear out easily. Insert the rings at the bottom or base of the rim around the snout, and the wire will hold them together until the wire before using, and it will bend and twist much better.

Planting and Cultivating Potatoes. D. H. Bulkeley, Willingtown, Mass., writes as follows to the Farm and Household: As it is about planting-time again, I wish to speak a word in favor of the potato, that they may have an equal chance with other vegetables, when they are found on the table of the high and low, the rich and the poor; all are alike lovers of the potato, and are dependent on them for food, as well as to help make up the variety. In planting, they are not to have an equal chance, but the ground for them must be put on some out-of-the-way place, not fit for any other crop, and a great favor is done to the potato when they get that attention, even of the smallest, and those that are unfit for any other purpose are used for planting, and then they are used for digging-time farmers are mad that they have no fine potatoes, when, if they would give them the attention and chance that other crops get, they would find their potato crop much more profitable and more palatable when they come to the table. I manage my sward land well with stable manure, and sow early as the ground is fit, and plow deep and harrow well. With selected seed I take my potato planter, which marks the ground and the drops, and covers all at one motion as fast as the horses can travel. As soon as they are up to be seen in the rows, I plaster and hoe after cultivation; at the next hoeing, I use the wing plow, and roll the furrow up to the potato, so that the hoe is but a little to do. I never failed of a good crop of potatoes. I find any potatoes are going to rot, I just drop that variety as if it was hot. I usually sow turnip-seed (purple-top straight-leaf), as soon as I hoe the second time, and get a good crop—from 100 to 250 bushels per acre. Last year I had, on three acres of land, 1,000 bushels of potatoes, and 650 bushels of turnips, with tops for feeding green, which I consider about equal to the turnip.

Time for Fowls. Some of our farming friends appear to be deeply impressed with the notion that hens need no food but corn in some of their flocks. But we might not to for everything that means the material system, and that is any part of the taken up any special branch of the race. It is a common error to suppose that hens of all kinds consume more or less of lime than the other elements entering into the composition of the bones, but the hen needs an extra supply. The domesticated hen also needs more than wild stock of any kind, since she is stimulated to a greater production of eggs. In consequence, we must give her more lime than is contained in the various grains, and the most useful forms in which to give lime are pound, crushed shells, pulverized mortar, and crushed bone. On the whole we prefer the former. Its preparation makes a good stin for the boys. We object to bone meal if not perfectly sweet; but a good, sound article is a first-rate thing for this use. Feed lime most abundantly at the time when the hens are laying most freely, and anticipate, if possible, by beginning early in the season, lest your fowls eat a shellless egg and acquire bad habits.

Triple Team. For using three horses abreast we have an ordinary double-tree, but as long as two singletrees; to each end of this attach a singletree by a small clevis or otherwise; now make an iron bar about 1 1/2 by 1 inch, and 8 inches long; punch a hole, one at each end, and one four inches from the first and one four inches from the second; this bar stands upright behind the doubletree; now attach the doubletree by clevis to link in first hole, attach the plow to link in second hole, and attach the middle singletree to the third or upper hole by a piece of chain or rod, so that the middle singletree will be as far forward as the others; now hitch each horse to his own singletree. In answer to Mr. Parmalee, I would say throw the plow toward the furrow by means of the clevis, or by shifting the beam on the standard, or both otherwise.

Orchard Profits. It was stated at a late meeting of the fruit growers of New York that an orchard of Baldwin apples trees, 140 in number, yielded last year 1,000 barrels. As the ground covered was about two acres, the net profits were $800 an acre.

Mystery of Captain Hall's Death.—The steward of the Polar, John Heron, says that Captain Hall, on his return from the sledge expedition, seemed to be immediately affected by the heat of the cabin. Heron made him a cup of coffee, part only of which he drank. He complained at once, took to his bed, and died in two or three days after. The character of his illness is extremely uncertain from the description given.

A despatch from Yreka says that C. Burgess has been bogged in the city of Yreka, where he was said to have been nothing at all but a contemptible mass of a man, who had been taken by the Commodore, and that there were thirty Modoc men, who would fight until the last man was killed.

Sketch of Ignacio Agramonte.

Ignacio de Agramonte, the Cuban general killed in a late engagement, was born at Puerto Principe, in Cuba, of highly respectable and well-to-do parents, in the year 1823. He was sent, while comparatively young, to Havana, where he entered the University. He passed a rigorous examination and was admitted to practice as a member of the Havana bar. Fortune favored the young lawyer with practice and renown. He resolved to marry and did so. In the early part of 1868 the revolution broke out and young Agramonte's pen and law books were hastily discarded, and he was one of the first to raise the lone star banner of "free Cuba" and to commence carrying on a guerrilla war. The Spanish forces were not then as heavily pushed as they are now, nor did the Cuban patriots hold sway on the same extent of territory they now do. Skirmishes were almost an everyday occurrence. Young Agramonte always insisted upon being in the front ranks, for death was often commented upon by his comrades and the Spaniards, who believed that he held a charmed life. The month of June, 1870, found the young lawyer enjoying the position of major-general and also member of the Congress of the Republic of Cuba from the Central Department, and it is related that Agramonte, by his eloquence and logical powers, was absolutely able to sway the minds of many of the older Senators, who felt themselves entranced with the young man's deep reasoning. In addition to serving under the command of General Quesada, he also fought with General Juan.

While residing for some time in a mountain fastness his young and beautiful wife gave birth to a boy. Later on she managed to escape from Cuba Libre at her husband's entreaties, who feared for her life, and came on to New York, where she gave birth to a second child. She is now living at the city of Merida, in Mexico. Agramonte did great damage to the Spaniards by means of his cavalry corps, composed principally of farmers and creole negroes, who were well mounted and rode like centaurs. This corps of flying artillery, under the command of Major General Agramonte, decimated, it is reported, nine detachments of Spanish cavalry numbering each forty or seventy men. When General Quesada left Cuba Libre on a mission to the United States for President Cespedes, Agramonte was placed in supreme military command of the Central Department. His name has been a tower of strength among the Cubans. His companion in the commencement of the struggle was his brother, who fought with him side by side. The parents of Agramonte were forced to fly the country on account of their affiliations with the revolution. The brother just alluded to sacrificed his ambition to his duty and came on to New York to support the family. The father soon fell a victim to this rigorous climate and died, and the mother became, and is still, heartbroken. Her son is now a practicing doctor and resides in New York with his mother, two sisters and a brother. In concluding this brief sketch an illustration of Agramonte's character is given. On one occasion at Havana, a friend of his was insulted by a Spanish major, named Valero, and a duel to the death was fought. Agramonte, being a clever swordsman, wounded his adversary in his face and in his body, and the loss of blood caused him to become so weak that he could fight no longer. Agramonte insisted that the duel should terminate, instead of giving his opponent the coup de grace, which most men in his place would have done.

Manufacturing. The benefit of manufacturing establishments to a town is pointedly illustrated in an incident mentioned by Dr. Morse before the St. Louis Farmers Club. He said: "A few years ago, a gentleman having invented an improvement in mowing-machines, proposed to the citizens of Canton, Ohio, that they should loan him $10,000 to manufacture that out of that place. They did it, and around the manufactory was the nucleus of a town. The following have gathered around it: immense agricultural implements, saw-mills, one of the best saw-works, one of the best hallow one of the best of mower-knives, furniture, one of the best harness, two of farm-wagons, one of the best of wrought-iron bridges, one of the best of large numbers of other things, and is still heartbroken. Her son is now a practicing doctor and resides in New York with his mother, two sisters and a brother. In concluding this brief sketch an illustration of Agramonte's character is given. On one occasion at Havana, a friend of his was insulted by a Spanish major, named Valero, and a duel to the death was fought. Agramonte, being a clever swordsman, wounded his adversary in his face and in his body, and the loss of blood caused him to become so weak that he could fight no longer. Wholesale Executions in China. The Temps, in its Indo-Chinese correspondence, reports a horrible fact which marked the surrender to the imperial troops of a city occupied by the rebels. Sin-Chef, which had long been in the hands of the insurgents, has fallen into the power of the army. Though but little blood was shed during the siege, after the capitulation all the defenders, to the number of six hundred, were beheaded, although they had surrendered voluntarily. An English adventurer in the service of the Chinese army, and at the same time correspondent for the Shanghai Courier, was present at the execution. All the victims died courageously, exclaiming to their butchers that their death would be avenged by their children. Some of them were unwilling to wait for that period, and threw themselves upon the soldiers, of whom they succeeded in killing four and wounding several. The general and his staff were not despoiled of their arms, and they had concealed in their sleeves.

PAIN! PAIN!! PAIN!!! WHERE IS THY RELIEF? Readers, you will find it in favorite Home Remedy. PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER.
