THE LOVE LETTERS OF AN IRISH LASSIE.

(All Rights Reserved.)

LETTER EIGHT.

IRELAND, January 20, 19—

MY DEAREST FRANK:—Your kind and loving letter was received yesterday and enjoyed hugely; although as I read the contents there was something in the tone of it that touched my heart and brought tears down my cheeks before I knew it. Dear Frank, you do write such sweet letters. It is the love in your noble heart that enables you to write such pretty letters? Love, yes, it is just as you say. Love can kill the strongest and raise the weakest. After I had said my evening prayer and retired to rest last Saturday evening, I wondered what you were doing and if you were then thinking of a little black-eyed girl in the quiet village named after the Emerald Isle. I now learn that long after I had entered dreamland you were answering my letter. I have often wondered if you felt like a new person when you are in love. Dear Frank, my happiness is in your hands, may you use that power with a discretion worthy of a noble purpose.

God, and He only knows why I have persisted in encouraging you, I have prayed for His direction and guidance in this important and solemn subject, I have never looked upon love lightly. Many girls delight in winning a young man's love, and after they have obtained it, trample upon it as they would a poor withered rose. Such a girl is not worthy to be loved. I have always endeavored to be judicious in such matters; but I have failed once or twice, innocently though. Dear Frank, I hope and trust that God will give me the power to increase your happiness instead of decreasing it. I wish it had been so arranged that we could have seen each other last summer, and then we could have learned more of each other's ways. However, all of your letters so far have suited me splendidly, and I hope mine have you. Your letters are to me like an oasis in a great desert.

Yes, dear boy, you are right about personal beauty, when I see a handsome young man I always think, "pretty is as pretty does." However, you are not homely by any means, at least you wasn't when I saw you last and the photo I saw of you the other day has told me better than you did in your last letter. I know young men that are homely in the face, but their ways, habits and morals have made them beautiful, and I thought them lovely. As a rule the majority of our handsome young men are spoiled with their good looks and are worthless; the same with the girls, lots of them; all they think of is to get a fine dress and promenade the streets to show it, or sit in the parlor with their hands folded while their poor mother is in the kitchen. They will make some man miserable, (if they happen to get one) won't they? Beauty will fade, riches will flee, but a constant love can never die.

Yes, I guess you are right about preachers liking lots of marriages, still those of this town can't complain, I never knew of so many marriages in one season in my life; I do wish I had kept account of them all. The older crowd here is just about gone; and the next to go will be our crowd; every time we meet we wonder who will be the first to go out of our crowd. Society here has about decided that I am to marry Mr. D.

I heard last Sunday of a gentleman talking in the Hotel here about weddings, when a preacher's son remarked that I and Mr. D. would be the next match. Ha! ha! He said: "He gave her a pair of diamond ear rings." Ha! ha!

Yes, I wish that he hadn't, too. They aren't diamonds, though. I am so tired of hearing gossip that I don't know what to do. D. is certainly mad at me, for he has never asked to call yet. I am very glad of that; but I do wish he had not given me the ear rings. In fact, I told him before he gave them to me that I didn't like to accept such a valuable present; but he wouldn't hear me and said: "Take them, they are all your own, if I hadn't esteemed you worthy of them I wouldn't have gave them to you." What do you think about it?

Yes, dear Frank, I'll keep you posted concerning he and I. Oh! yes, I pretty near forgot to tell you he had another young lady to church last Sunday night. They went to another church, but of course, I got to hear of it.

I don't think George has the least idea about you and I. I don't think I ever gave him any room to suspect the true state of my feelings. I always try to keep my secrets hid when I am in company; I don't believe in telling everything you know.

No, Frank, I don't think a man always loves a girl for beauty. In fact, I would never want a man to love me for beauty, (not much danger, though) but for myself alone. I am glad that I am beautiful in one person's eyes, and that is you.

I am glad that Miss L. didn't love you, Frank, at least to such an extent that in ceasing your calls would cause her pain. I don't think you have a great deal of jealousy in your heart, dear boy.

I wish you could get acquainted with Miss M. I want you to tell me what she says about me when you mention my name to her, but don't mention it right at first. She don't like me. I will tell you her reason some time. I was at a party not long ago, and during the evening, I was sitting and talking to one of the boys, and he wanted to know how my gentleman friend was getting along. I wanted to know what gentleman friend as I had quite a number; he said the one I corresponded with, he didn't know exactly where he lived but thought in N. Y. City. I just laughed at him and told him that he was dreaming with his eyes open; that I had no gentleman friend in N. Y. that I knew of. Where he found out anything I don't know. I tried to get him to tell me where he got his information but couldn't. I told him he hadn't any reason to talk to me that way. I wanted to find out where he could have heard it; and I tried numerous ways but of no avail. I bet I do find out.

Well, it is growing late, and I'll obey the "Sisters Pleade" who are seeking their repose by withdrawing from sight in the celestial regions, I like a star of the first magnitude will do likewise and wait you a sweet whispered good night. Your loving devoted little girl,
LILLIE.

P. S.—Write real soon. I forgot to tell you my dream but will another time.
