COME AND SEE US

Westward, Ho!

On Tuesday morning, August 14th, we left the golden streets of Ironton, about 10 o'clock, A. M., with our crew of six, not counting "old Judy" and the other three steeds.

After leaving the good, smooth roads of solid old Iron county, we found some regular ague shaking, liver-displacing road, through south Bellevue, until we reached a good spring, where we stopped to rest our Pegasi.

After dinner, passing up Bellevue Valley the heat was stifling, reaching, at last, the pleasant home of Dr. G. W. Farrar, Jr., where a most cordial invitation was given us to stop and rest, and stay.

Did you ever wish, or try, to sit at once on two stools? That was my condition; I wished to stay with my son and family, and was equally anxious to go forward to my prospective destination.

Resting several hours, on the wide veranda and under the wide spreading trees on the lawn until 4 P. M., we again packed ourselves into the crates of our van or wagonette.

As we bowled along speedily, the declining sun found us "off our native heath"; we began to scan every nook and shady creek, looking for a suitable place to pitch our tent.

After our supper table was cleaned away the "divine afflatus" seized the musical members and with instruments, not of war, but of peace, banjos, violin, guitar, and vox humana.

Such appetites as we all carried that supper would cause a famine, if it became contagious.

Next morning just before day break a flash of lightning and roll of thunder reveille to call us out.

By 10 o'clock we had as bright and lovely weather as a day in June. A few miles traveled and we came out again where it was as dry as Ironton has been.

the glorious light of the silver moon riding in full majesty, and perhaps some more terrestrial measures or influences kept us long in waiting for peaceful slumber.

After a hearty, much-enjoyed breakfast, like the Arabian we folded our tents and sped away.

Another rest for dinner near a splendid spring which gushed full fledged from the side of a hill, near Love's schoolhouse, with water clear as crystal, and so deliciously cool, one needed no ice.

From here the country became more broken, one hill following another like stairs, each a little higher than the last.

No creek, no springs, no wells: all were dry. Inquiry at numerous houses disclosed the fact that we were at last in that long desired country of the dry: nothing but a few cisterns with wretched stale dregs which smelled to Heaven, and people hauling water from creeks for miles.

As evening closed down we learned there was good water about a mile and a half ahead; our ponies heard the word gladly, and in proof they sailed down those steep grades without whip or spur, until we reached the haven, and found two nice springs of water, to which we soon bent reverently, and eagerly quaffed the cooling draught.

A nice supper of squirrels, the result of the vigilance of our Nimrods, a rest by our camp fire, and then under a wide spreading sycamore we stretched our tents, spread out our welcome couches, and slept as only the weary, and the innocent can sleep.

Our umbrellas fairly bent under the weight of water and force of the rain. By 3 P. M. the sun again shone out brightly, and coming up on higher rise of ground, we shook out our wet wraps and umbrellas, to dry out in the sunshine.

Salem is rather, yes quite a pretty town, somewhat spread out, as if there were plenty of room, and no need of crowding; a most admirable plan.

Passing through we soon left the town, and changed our course from west to south. Rolling along over sand hill after hill, we again camped for night two miles south of the town; but being now out of the boundary of springs and wells, we had to stop near a pond, out of which our team of well raised animals refused to drink, though the native horses and sheep drank with avidity.

After looking as long as time permitted, the girls started bravely ahead, on foot, leaving the business part of the firm to hitch up and overtake them.

The annual meeting of the Missouri Press Association of 1894 will be held in Lebanon September 20th, 21st and 22d.

The citizens of Lebanon are making extensive preparations to entertain the editors and their families during the three days' meeting in the "Magnetic City" of the Ozarks.

Lebanon is a delightful summer resort and is noted as a convention city. It is a beautiful little city of 3,500 inhabitants, having ample and unexcelled hotel accommodations and has entertained a number of state conventions and other large gatherings.

The superb Gasconade Hotel, the finest in the west, with accommodations for 350 to 400 people, will be headquarters for the Association.

Mr. C. W. H. Eaton, Republican candidate for County Judge of the Western District, was in this neighborhood yesterday, in the interest of his candidacy.
