MAY MEAN MUCH TO TURKEY.

The Death of the Russian Consul at Mitrovitz and What May Follow.

Vienna, April 5.—"If I am killed Turkey's extinction is certain," is the statement attributed to M. St. Cherbina, Russian consul at Mitrovitz, before he was shot.

The consul's words have made a deep impression on the sultan. They are also considered by the insurgents as an indication that Russia may be expected in a short time to refuse to temporize any further with Turkey and to organize a scheme for European intervention.

An Austrian member of parliament, who has just returned from a journey through the Balkans, said: "The reforms have failed to pacify the Christians, because of the exaggerated reports in the English and French newspapers, and because of the hope that Russia would come to the rescue whenever Slav blood began to flow. This statement confirms the reports that the Bulgarians, who are strong, primitive, cruel and relentless, are the prime movers in the insurrection."

"These Bulgarians are keen students of European political tendencies, and discern the possibility of a new triple alliance as the result of the confused and threatening situation in the Balkan peninsula. Great Britain, France and Italy are the powers associated in this connection, and the particular object set before them is the preservation of the status quo and the pacification of southeastern Europe."

"It is believed that this alliance, which already exists in sentiment, is daily becoming closer. The three nations, without any reservation touching Russia's ally, are a unit in their suspicion and apprehension regarding the real purpose of Russia and Austria in the Balkans. They are afraid that they may wake up some morning and find Turkey in ruins, with Russia and Austria in possession of the debris. The views of England, France and Italy as to the proper course of action in the disturbed peninsula are absolutely harmonious. None of the three powers doubt the sincerity of the others."

GAS EXPLODES IN A MINE.

One Hundred Men Entombed and Were Barely Rescued From Certain Death.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., April 4.—An explosion of gas occurred Friday afternoon in No. 5 mine of the Lehigh & Wilkesbarre Coal Co. in the southern part of this city. A force of volunteers was quickly organized and went to the assistance of the miners supposed to be imperiled below. When they reached the foot of the shaft they made their way to that portion where the men were supposed to be. They were met by some of the mine bosses, and informed that there had been an explosion in No. 3 slope in the third east gangway of the mine. There were 100 men working in that portion of the mine, and for a time it was feared they were lost. The rescuing parties, however, found them all within half an hour, and none was burned or in any way injured. They had been working their way to the foot of the shaft from every portion of the mine.

The explosion was caused by a miner with a naked lamp running into a body of gas. Several doors were blown down and considerable brattice work was wrecked. Succeeding the explosion there was a slight fire in one of the working chambers, but this was speedily extinguished. Apart from the wrecked doors and airways no other damage was done to the mine.

TRIED TO STEAL THE SAFE.

Thieves Loot a House on a Prominent Street in St. Louis While Neighbors Calmly Look On.

With the neighbors still watching them the men carried a safe, weighing about five hundred pounds, out of the building and they would have made way with it had not the horse, which they were driving, become frightened at a white quilt, which covered the safe. It contained $300 in cash and $200 worth of jewelry, as well as many valuable papers. It was hurled to the pavement, and wrecked, but the robbers did not stop to examine its contents, and escaped.

DOVER TAVERN WHERE FORT DONELSON WAS SURRENDERED. Find Gen. Buckner.

On February 13, 1862, Gen. Grant arrived before Fort Donelson with an army of some 20,000 men. The investment of the place was practically completed on the 14th. One of the inspiring incidents at Donelson was the charge of the brigade composed of the Seventeenth, Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Illinois regiments against Maney's battery. Time after time they climbed the hill, only to be driven back when success seemed assured by a gallant infantry fire. Severe fighting continued throughout the 14th and 15th, and it was not until Gen. Floyd had telegraphed his chief, Gen. Johnson, that the victory was with the confederates that the mistake was discovered. Gen. Grant announced his terms "unconditional surrender," and these were accepted by Gen. Buckner at Dover Tavern, where the surrender occurred, on the 16th of February, 1862.

HIS REMARKABLE SHOT.

Entitled Him to the Championship Over Blackbird-Killers of the World.

"Speaking of remarkable shots," said the man from one of the near-by parishes, relates the New Orleans Times-Democrat, "in me you behold the man who holds the blackbird championship of the world, and while the fact is not generally known, there are a few men in my parish who can testify to the truthfulness of my story. This expert shooting you see on the stage, the mirror trick, shooting backward, breaking clay pigeons and balls; circus shooting, wild west shooting and all that kind of thing, is child's play in comparison with my record. One evening several years ago I slipped over the levee up in my parish to shoot at a drove of blackbirds which I found feeding in the rice field. The birds were scattered over an acre of ground. Just as an experiment I gave the gun a swing as I fired both barrels, covering in the range of the swing the whole area covered by the birds. I was in close shooting range. To my surprise only a few birds attempted to fly away, and these few fell a short distance from where they started. Others hopped around in a stunned sort of fashion. I never saw as many dead blackbirds in my life. I thought I was dreaming at first. Several friends came along and I invited them to help themselves. I do not know how many sacks I filled with birds, and I would actually be ashamed to guess at the number I killed. The gun was heavily loaded, and the birds were grouped in a basin which was almost the shape of a bowl, because of a sharp bend in the levee line. Many of the birds were not wounded, or bruised in any way, so I figured that the fearful slaughter was mainly due to concussion." "Lemme smoke that pipe awhile," said the man on the other side of the table, and the members began to talk of other things.

THE ART OF A SALESLADY.

An Illustrative Instance of the Necessity of Tact in Her Position.

Occasionally a girl forgets herself and takes it up on the customer, and then she is apt to lose her place. For instance, a friend of mine, tired from standing all day, exasperated by the repeated questions of some woman who kept asking whether the goods were really all wool, finally snapped out: "All except the buttons," and promptly lost her job, says the "Autobiography of a Shop Girl," in Leslie's Monthly. Another friend of mine came very near losing her place for the same reason, but escaped through her cleverness. A dumpy woman, with no figure and a painted face, a would-be coquette, insisted after a long investigation, on purchasing a certain garment. Tired as the girl was, she advised another garment, for she knew the one selected would not fit the woman's ugly figure. "This is better for your figure," she said, really with a malicious intention. "Figure," shouted the customer. "Lemme tell you, you hussy, that my figure is better than yours." The buyer was standing by, and the saleslady, as quick as a flash, replied: "Exactly, madam, that is why I recommend this piece." The buyer, who had heard her reply, complimented her warmly on her tact, after the sale was transacted.

Difference in Men.

Mrs. Buttercup—I see by this paper that a Missouri man has refused to bury his wife. That just shows what despicable creatures men are.

Mr. Buttercup—Oh, no, my dear; all men are not like that. I'm sure I should not feel the least unwillingness to bury you.—Kansas City Journal.

What They Want.

MILITIA AND THE ARMY.

Steps taken to Secure Co-Operation Between the National Guard and the Regular Army.

IRRESPONSIBLE STORIES CORRECTED.

Statement Made by Gen. Corbin, Adjutant General of the Army—The National Guard Must be Inspected and the Results Known Before New Arms Will be Issued.

Washington, April 5.—Gen. Corbin, adjutant general of the army, has made a terse statement of the steps which have been taken under the militia law to secure co-operation between the national guard, organization and the regular establishment. The statement was made by request to straighten out the many irresponsible stories which have been circulated as to the plans and intentions of the department in connection with the new law. The general said: "The war college board has considered the militia law in its every bearing. The judge advocate general of the army has given it consideration. The board has pointed out the necessary details of the work in putting the law into effect."

"The judge advocate general has outlined for the secretary of war his powers under the law. The secretary has ordered that there shall be inspection of all the national guard regiments. Orders have been sent to the department commanders for them to issue the necessary orders to officers for the inspection details. That is as far as the department has gone. That is as far as the department will go at present. That is far as it is necessary to go. There will be no further steps until these inspections show clearly the extent of the national guard organizations and the degree of their efficiency."

Gen. Corbin denies that any steps have been taken in the direction of issuing the new and modern guns for the militia. He says it would be manifestly absurd to issue guns before accurate information was at hand as to the number of men in each command.

Gen. Corbin believes that the inspections can all be completed by May 1. He says there will be at least one regular army officer as inspector for every militia regiment. The inspections will be held at times and places which are satisfactory to the officers and men of the national guard.
