With the Camera.

When two or three people start out to the fair with a camera or kodak, but with no knowledge as to the best methods to get the desired results, something unexpected and unintended is sure to follow. Two young ladies and a young man came hurriedly through the gates evidently intent on getting pictures of people, buildings, and anything else that might prove of interest to them. The young man carried the camera, but when it came to the picture taking, that was left for the girls. They walked and looked, tried this spot and that, but none seemed to be the proper place. Jefferson guards eyed them suspiciously, and tourists hurried to and fro, stopping to see the view, often times getting squarely in front of the instrument, in their eagerness to see what was to be taken. A man came by, who had evidently had some experience trying to get the Festival Hall, cascades, fountains and lagoon, and ventured the information that it would be necessary to go on top of the Manufacturers building if these all were to be included in one snap. The next venture was a scene on the lagoon, and just as a group of boats left the landing, "click" and they were taken. On the west side of the lagoon where the wall of the lake curves out from the cascades, the girls climbed out and from that vantage secured a good picture or two. Once with the camera all set, ready for taking what promised to be the finest of them all, when just as the little button was pushed, there appeared before the apparatus a ponderous form of humanity weighing no less than two hundred pounds, bedecked in purple plaid and topped with a gorgeous picture hat. It developed into a large piece of plaid, crowned with the dome of Festival Hall, with one arm lost in the fountains, and the other arm, well, what matters if it entirely disappeared!

Monday was the last free children's day, and right well they enjoyed it. A big parade was one of the features, coming down the broad avenue amid cheers and flag waving. It did seem as if books and circulars were purposely hid, and souvenirs put behind lock and key, for usually you get them by the score, but somebody has said the children did not appreciate those things, and only spot the registers with ink, therefore, better give them a clear way.

Up by the pygmies, the children swarmed all day, trying to get a peep at them. Their little huts of boards and sacks, and the dirt covered houses were securely closed, unless the "tin sints" was displayed, when with a smile you were admitted. All the children wanted to see the little three months' old baby, and it kept the little brown mother poking it back and forth all day. For only a "nook" you can get a peep and only a peep, because the little blinking eyes are quickly covered. At one time the future greets got so numerous and so persistent to see, and were peeping through every crack and rent, that it became unendurable, and out came a pail of water on the youthful heads, which sent them lying to the next shack.

Just west of the pygmies the Indian school furnishes hours of interesting sight-seeing. There you find them much as they live on the reservations in Arizona, California and New Mexico. A wide hall or passage way extends the full length of the building, and in little stalls or booths they work or have little stands to sell their wares. Very attractive beaded moccasins are sold at from $1.75 to $2.50. Beaded purses with long leather fringe seems the most popular selling article. The drawn work and embroidery is really marvelous in beauty and intricacy of pattern. Such delicate traceries seem so foreign to their surroundings. The blacksmith is there, forging his necessary tools; the silversmith is to his left with his little smouldering coals, he fashions you a souvenir spoon or silver ring; while on a little further in another stall, you find an old Indian woman shaping the clay to form a vase or jar. In this same enclosure, a young squaw sits on a crude bench and plays with a little creeping baby, who squints and laughs at you, and holds out its little hand for money. Further on you find the school room, and here a young Indian is reciting something about the Louisiana Purchase, but the hall is so crowded it is impossible to get near enough to hear more than a word or two, and quite impossible to secure a picture. In a small recreation room is seen the drawings and paintings of the school children, and a very excellent model of the Indian schools made from wood covered with grain. Corn, wheat, oats and the seeds of grasses are so used to produce an effect like that of different colored paints. A model dining room is shown and a model Indian school is carried on. Some of the boys and girls are quite good looking, and are as neatly clad as their daily visitors. Two immense totem poles stand guard at the east entrance of the building. Just south of the school is a model trading-post general store, which is a most excellent reproduction of the cross-roads store of the rural districts of Missouri.

Concerning Text-Books.

JEFFERSON CITY, Aug. 29, 1904. To School Boards and Superintendents of Schools:—Complaint has been made by patrons concerning changes in text-books. In one instance a published report of the progress of a school board gave the adoption of a recommendation for several changes. Many inquiries come from dealers and teachers indicating that they think some new books have been adopted. A surety company asks to be released from bond of one of the publishing companies with whom the State has a contract, saying that the publishers informed that the contract had expired. These facts make it necessary for me to call your attention to the situation again.

The law of 1897 provided for the adoption of text-books to be used in the schools "for five years and until otherwise provided for by law." The contracts were entered into, using the same language. The Legislature has not "otherwise provided." The law and the contracts are as much in force now as they ever were. No changes can be made until there has been some legislative enactment touching the matter.

The law makes it a misdemeanor for school boards to permit the use of any book in the place of an adopted book, and forfeits the bond of any publisher that fails to supply books at contract prices. Many earnest, honest, progressive teachers prefer other texts to some of the adopted books. Some books are out of date and others were never as good as the best. The only thing that can be done is to follow the law until public sentiment demands a change.

The State Superintendent urged the last Legislature to authorize some changes in the list. (See his report of 1902.) The Legislature refused. The metropolitan press, the organized lobby and many who feared that a change would prove expensive, united in defeating the measure having for its object a gradual change in text-books and a reduction in prices.

One of the publishers recently wrote: "Our attitude regarding the whole situation is identical with that of other publishing companies." This is evidence that there is an agreement among publishers to confuse the situation in Missouri to the end, that all laws governing adoptions and prices be repealed.

The law is binding on both parties to the contract and it is the duty of the State Superintendent to enforce it. So far, all reported abuses have been corrected without resort to courts and it is the desire of the State Superintendent that this may not become necessary. Publishers must have books on sale in at least two places in each county at the contract prices. School boards must not permit the use of any text in lieu of an adopted book.

This circular letter is sent to superintendents, school boards and publishers with the hope that all parties concerned will take due notice of the law.

Most Respectfully,
W. T. CARRINGTON,
State Supt. Pub. Schools.

Cured a Comrade of Cholera Morbus and Saved His Life.

"While returning from the Grand Army encampment at Washington City in 1892, a comrade from Elgin, Ill., was taken with cholera morbus and was in a critical condition," says Mr. J. E. Houghland, of Eltowa. "I gave him Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and believe saved his life. I have been engaged for ten years in immigration work and conducted many parties to the south and west. I always carry this remedy and have used it successfully on many occasions. No person traveling or at home should be without this remedy." For sale by Arcadia Valley Drug Store.

In the treasury, or at least they don't use it to improve our roads in this part of the county. The other day while going along the road I saw something coming, but could scarcely make out what it was, but soon discovered it was two fine looking men who were out for a buggy ride. The road was so bad that one man was out leading the horse while the other was pushing. They were making all kinds of threats against the road overseer. SNOWFLAKE.

Obituary.

Maude E. Haven was born Dec. 8th 1870, and departed this life Aug. 21, 1904. The deceased was the daughter of Jesse and Emma Harral, who though feeble with the infirmities of years, still survive to mourn the loss of an affectionate daughter.

When less than twelve years old she professed and joined the Methodist church, in which communion she continued until transferred to the church triumphant. May 9th, 1893 she was united in marriage to Franklin Haven. Three children have been born to them, the youngest of which preceded the mother only a few weeks to the land of spirits. A few months ago the husband brought his wife and children from St. Louis, where they had been living for several years, trusting that a stay in the country might result in a restoration to health. But the disease was too far gone, and all that loving friends could do proved unavailing.

On the morning of the 23d, inst., we laid her mortal remains in the silent tomb not far from the scenes of her early life to await the resurrection. May He who tempereth the winds keep the husband by His grace the dear boys, who at such a tender age, have been deprived of the two most priceless boons—a mother's love and a mother's prayers. LESLIE H. DAVIS.

Devoured By Worms.

Children often cry, not from pain, but from hunger, although fed abundantly. The entire trouble arises from inanition, their food is not assimilated, but devoured by worms. A few doses of White's Cream Vermifuge will cause them to cease crying and begin to thrive at once, very much to the surprise and joy of the mother. 25c at Arcadia Valley Drug Co.

All liabilities of the late firm will be assumed and paid by it, and it will receive and receipt for all sums due up to date of dissolution. Thankful for the favors extended the old firm, the new respectfully asks for a continuation of the same. Des Arc, Mo., Sept. 1, 1904. WM. STEVENSON. JNO. STEVENSON.
