NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Home Part of White House Barred to the Curious

WASHINGTON.—While the main floor of the White House is open to visitors at certain hours every weekday, the second, or residential story, is carefully guarded against intrusion by the public, which, all the more for this reason, is intensely curious to know what goes on upstairs—how the rooms are arranged, what the furniture is like, and how the presidential folks spend their time when at home.

Fifteen years or more ago the White House was half office building. Today, however, the White House—thanks to its reconstruction by Mr. Roosevelt, at a cost of $500,000—is the most admirably equipped and most comfortable palace in the world.

The White House now has ten bedrooms, the removal of the presidential business offices from the mansion to an annex having made space available for five additional guest chambers.

These five guest chambers occupy the east wing of the mansion on the second floor, four of them being directly over the historic east room. The fifth—adjoining the library—is immediately above the green parlor.

All of the ten bedrooms, as well as the library, open upon a wide corridor which runs through the middle of the building from end to end.

If, walking along Pennsylvania avenue, one pauses for a view of the front of the White House, he may think that the suite of rooms occupied by the president and his wife is represented by the last five windows of the second story toward the right.

The government furnishes everything required for housekeeping purposes, and it is not desired that presidential property should get mixed up with that of Uncle Sam. Even soap and towels are supplied, and, oh, the linen—such quantities of it, hemstitched and embroidered!

The mistress of the executive mansion has no "wash list." Uncle Sam attends to that, as well as to the housecleaning. The kitchen department runs itself, as if by clockwork.

Wonderful Machine That Computes Tide Tables

A GOVERNMENT book, "written" in as peculiar a way, perhaps, as any other modern publication, is the constant object of reference of hundreds of navigators, engineers, hydrographers and other scientists, not only in the United States, but in all parts of the world.

The book consists of tables of closely printed figures, more or less unintelligible to the layman, but showing, to those who understand them, for the entire calendar year, the exact hour and minute of each day when the tide will rise to its crest and sink to its lowest depth in all the important ports that are bathed by the seven seas.

The creation of these wonderfully accurate tables is not in the hands of a corps of seasoned computers, for the good reason that even the best of them would have to devote six months or more to the labor of computing tide tables for a year for a single port.

When the tide tables for any locality are desired the numerous cranks on the side of the machine are set in accordance with "harmonic constants" for the place, already known from observation, and the figures for the tables are then secured by turning the principal crank of the apparatus.

Ontonagon Boulder Now in the National Museum

EMPLOYEES of the Smithsonian institution have finished a heavy job in moving the Ontonagon boulder from the institution to the new National museum. This large mass of copper has been in the possession of the Smithsonian institution since 1860.

The boulder is 3 1/2 feet long, 3 feet wide and 1 1/2 feet in its thickest part, and owing to the great density of copper, weighs nearly three tons.

For ages this mass of copper lay on the bank of Ontonagon river in the upper peninsula of Michigan, where it was known for many years by the Chippewa Indians of that region.

It was not until 1776 that the first white man, Alexander Henry, an English adventurer and trader, visited this remarkable specimen.

During the next 75 years many explorers and scientists followed Henry's footsteps until the boulder came to be well known as a mineralogical curiosity. It was undoubtedly worth several thousand dollars, but its weight prevented anyone from taking it away.

In 1841 Julius Eldred, a hardware merchant of Detroit, bought this copper rock from the Chippewa Indians, on whose lands it was located, and, two years later, after many difficulties, succeeded in transporting it down the Ontonagon river through Lake Superior to Sault Ste. Marie, and thence to Detroit, where it was placed on exhibition for a short time.

Soon after its arrival the government claimed it, and in 1842 it was shipped to Washington and deposited in the yard of the quartermaster's bureau of the war department, where it remained till 1860, when it was transferred to the Smithsonian institution.

Some years later the government repaid Mr. Eldred for his time and work in securing this boulder, congress having appropriated $5,646.90 for this purpose.

Uncle Sam Has the Biggest of Printing Plants

OF all the governments in the world, the government of the United States tries the hardest to keep its people informed of what is doing. That is why this government printing office here in Washington is the biggest printing office in existence.

The fact that the office uses more than 22,000,000 pounds of paper and more than 65,000 pounds of ink in a year in printing matter for distribution among the people is merely an index to the quantity of work turned out.

Cornelius Ford, public printer, head of the army of 4,000 employees in the great plant, was discussing his job and what it means.

"Every activity of this government gets into the printing office sooner or later," he went on, "and the number of those activities is almost past counting. Every one of them has a direct bearing on the lives and the interests of some considerable portion of the public. That is why Uncle Sam puts the record in print, so all may read."
