Another schedule will be arranged for the shorter days about October 1st.

Mr. John Fahland, of Pilot Knob, local manager for the Egyptian Tie & Timber Company, tells us that his Company has quit buying mine props at Iron Mountain, Pilot Knob, Ironton, Arcadia, Hogan, Sabula and Annapolis, for the reason that the yards are filled with props and there is at present no demand for the same. Mr. Fahland says the demand for ties is good, but the delay in inspection impedes shipment. He looks for an improvement in the prop market in the next month.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces that an examination will be held in Ironton, Saturday, April 12th, 1919, to fill the position of rural carrier at Arcadia. Admission of women to this examination will be limited to those who are unmarried and to the wives of soldiers and sailors. Applications should be forwarded to the Commission at Washington, at the earliest practicable date.

Iron county has raised but $478.87 for the Armeian and Syrian Relief Fund. Our quota is $750. This is the first one of the war relief drives in which our little county has failed to "make good." In all other instances we have gone "over the top." There is no good reason for our having failed this time, and one or two communities that might be mentioned should even yet righteously resolve to open up their pocket-books and amend the paucity of their contributions. We make due acknowledgment to the colored people of the valley who contributed $30 to this fund. If all the other citizens of the county had done equally well we would have gone way "over the top."

Mrs. William Joseph Phelan, 25 years of age, wife of William Joseph Phelan, died at her home, 5789 Pershing avenue, St. Louis, at 8:30 A. M. Sunday. An infant son, two days old, died Saturday. Mrs. Phelan was the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. James Warren Wick, who for a number of years made their home in Ironton. It was here that the deceased, Rebecca Wick, grew from childhood to young womanhood, and the announcement of her death was heard with genuine sorrow. Mrs. Phelan was a most charming and gracious person and a musician of note. A double funeral was held Tuesday and interment made in Calvary cemetery, St. Louis. To the bereaved we offer our sympathy.

Wm. Davis, twenty-one years of age, was arrested at the home of his father, J. E. Davis, one mile west of Ironton, last Friday night by Sheriff Blue and a secret service man from St. Louis. Davis was arrested by the federal authorities at Joplin, Mo., about a month ago, on the charge of changing $1 to $10 bills, but he succeeded in making his escape from the Joplin jail a day or two later. Our sheriff was informed that Davis would probably come here to his father's and was asked to keep a look out. The young man had hardly landed until Mr. Blue was aware of the fact and he at once communicated with the secret service operator who came down and made the arrest. The prisoner was taken to Joplin Saturday morning.

We had the heaviest snow of the winter last Saturday. The flakes began to fall about ten o'clock in the morning and the precipitation continued almost without cessation for about twelve hours. The flakes were large and came down in torrents. The wind blew fiercely and conditions were anything but comfortable for those who were out in the storm. A sufficient volume of snow fell to cover the ground for several inches had it been in condition to retain it; but the earth was moist and warm and most of the flakes melted as they fell.

Sunday morning there was scarcely an inch of snow on the ground and most of it disappeared during the day. As the snow was falling there were frequent peals of thunder, loud and rumbling, just like those accompanying a summer shower. Rather an unusual occurrence.

Saturday's St. Louis Post-Dispatch: "Capt. Lon W. Harlow of the 354th Infantry, Eighty-ninth Division, has arrived here from overseas and is receiving treatment at the Jefferson Barracks Hospital for shell wound of his left knee received in the St. Mihiel drive last September. He is not confined in the hospital and is able to walk around. Capt. Harlow, when wounded, was reconnoitering a battalion of which he was acting commander to fill up a gap between two regiments of infantry. Capt. Atwell T. Lincoln, of St. Louis, of the same regiment, formerly a leather dealer, was sent in to relieve Harlow as battalion commander after Harlow was wounded, and was killed in action in a short time. Capt. Harlow previously had been gassed in July while leading his company to relieve a French force. There are many St. Louisians in 354th Infantry, which is now stationed along the Rhine. It was made up of drafted men from Camp Funston. The regiment arrived in France June 21. According to Capt. Harlow it suffered casualties of 2500 between September 12 and the signing of the armistice. He was connected with a local surety company before receiving a commission. His home is at Kimmswick, Mo. He is a graduate of Western Military Academy at Alton."

Our Soldier Boys.

Private T. C. Mitchell, Co. C, 354th Infantry, 89th Division, is now with the 3d Army in Germany, and writes us some of his experiences during the period when that Division was engaged in fighting. "We first went to the front in August, on what was called the Toul Sector, which was on the right side of the St. Mihiel salient. The particular sector taken by our division lay between Seicheprey and Point-a-Mousson. Our regiment occupied the village (ruins) of Flirey on the front line. The first week we went up, our battalion, the first, had the line and the second and third remained back and in reserve. Our companies in support occupied woods just back of the lines. We were relieved after eight days by the second battalion. We then went back for reserve for sixteen days. The next time we went up Companies A and C took positions on the front, and Band D were in support. We had several casualties that week, especially after a barrage the Germans put over. September 11 found us gathering in trenches in reserve, ready to follow up the "storming wave" that was to go over the next day. The weather had been cloudy and rainy and there had been much mud for several days, affording good cover for the endless string of transportation the French and Americans had been making to bring up the artillery, tanks, ammunition, etc. On the night of the 11th we went into our trenches. The big barrage suddenly broke loose at 1 A. M. of the 12th and continued well on into the day. The shock unit went over the top at 5 A. M. but we in the reserve went later. As we were starting German prisoners begin coming in and ambulances were coming back with wounded men. We went forward that day to a point a little north of Bouillonville and began digging in, but at nightfall we were again moved forward. The next morning after some other unit had failed to take the objective planned between Berey and Xammes, first battalion was given the job. They moved forward over a stretch of high open ground through a reception of shell-fire and despite of some resulting disorganization took the objective. We went into reserve again that evening after our third battalion had relieved us and occupied the position taken. For the next few days we were in the edge at Thiancourt Woods southwest of Berey. Our battalion occupied the lines two different times before we were relieved the first week in October by the 87th Division. When relieved in October we were moved over into the Argonne sector where our division was in reserve for a few days. Then some of our units took the lines relieving the 33d Division. We occupied the sector between Verdun and Vouziers to the right of the Argonne Forest. On October 31st we took over the front lines preparatory to going over the top next morning as storm troops. The big artillery preparations began at 3:30. At 5:30 we started forward, keeping close on the tail of the barrage which then began to creep forward. The machine gun nests were present and made some resistance until their operators saw it was hopeless. They would then come frantically from their holes with hands in air, and be directed to the rear, many of them in their fear of the "Barbaous Americans" continuing to hold up their hands after they had passed the first line. Most of them seemed immensely relieved to find themselves permitted to live. We used quite a number of them as litter bearers, and some even helped at First Aid Work, at which they showed themselves deft and efficient. In order to take our objective the First Battalion had to take Remonville, where a number of machine gun nests had to be cleaned out. We had most of our casualties in the Wood beyond the village, which position the enemy shelled more or less for the next day or two, until the units that went on beyond us pushed the Boche out of range. On the night of the 10th we moved forward to a position near the Meuse River about 7 kilometers below Stenay. We were to cross the river just beyond which was the front line on the morning of the 11th, and leap-frog the 356th Infantry, which went over the top that morning. Company A and one platoon of B did in fact get over before hostilities ceased. The rest of us were still on the west side and staid on a hill there till the morning of the 12th."

Private J. E. Calvert, Co. C, 3d M. C. Battalion, 1st Division, writes from Gerod, Germany, on February 9: "I do not do very much now but eat and sleep, but that isn't saying that I am the very best satisfied. For the fighting is over now and it seems as if it were a waste of time to stay longer. We did heavy fighting in the Argonne. We were there twice. There is not a harder fighting Division than the 1st. The first trip we were there 18 days and were in our hardest battle and we only drove the Hun about five or six miles. The advance through the wood was a foot at a time, for the Hun was prepared for us. We were relieved and got more men and went back again from October 19th to November 11th. That place and Soissons, St. Mihiel and Cantigny I'll long remember. Brother and Sister Riggs have my greatest sympathy in the death of Russell, as well as the parents of the boys over there who fell at my side and who had become my friends. Some fell so close that I was covered with blood and small pieces of flesh, which I wiped from my clothes, when they were struck by the large shells. Why should I not be one of the most thankful persons alive to-day to know that I am still in existence and well and healthy? I weigh at least 150 lbs. and am gaining every day. You would hardly know me. I received the fountain pen you sent me, but have not received the Christmas package yet."

Hartford Collins while on furlough in Ironton told us many interesting experiences of his long stay at Funston. Hartford belonged to the 356th Infantry. Last spring he had a spell of pneumonia from which he barely recovered, and when he did get out it was too late to go over with the 89th Division. So he staid on at Funston and was made a sergeant in another Division and helped to train the men who were sent in the draft. Just as that division was ready to start for Europe the armistice was signed. All are now discharged except the regular army men. Hartford now has a position as information clerk at the Statler Hotel in St. Louis.

Lawrence R. Aldridge, who is in Ward C. Base Hospital, at Camp Grant, Ills., is at home on a furlough. Just a year ago he left for Camp, and this is his first furlough. He was first put in medical corps at Fort Riley, and then transferred to Camp Grant ever since. He speaks of his work in a bright cheerful manner, notwithstanding the fact that he had hoped to be put in artillery at Camp Funston and go over with the 89th Division. The best soldier is the one who does his best, without grumbling, in whatever place he is assigned. Lawrence is now in the Isolation Ward, where they have cases of Diphtheria, Spinal Meningitis, Chicken Pox, etc. He says they have separate wards for measles, scarlet fever and those diseases.

Play Item: "Dog fights enliven the street. 'Conservation,' the blooded dog owned by Miss Mary Lou Lester, recently did battle on the public street. Miss Lester is a member of the house-party given by Lieutenant and Mrs. W. J. Wayne." "Mr. Neil Rutherford has bought a new limousine."

Justice cannot be given the social events of late date. Important among the listed affairs, is the party given by the Junior and Senior classes by the Sophomore class, last Friday night. The pretty hostesses wore their class colors, grey and old rose, in satin ribbons on their arms. The young gentlemen were not so festive. Mr. Lyle Marr was an impressive master of ceremonies and promises to become a skilled master of the social graces. Would that others might emulate him. The affair was held at the Valley Inn. After soft music and merry discourse had beguiled the greater part of the evening, refreshments were served, consisting of ice-cream and delicious cake. The place cards were tied with black and gold ribbon. The brilliant company dispersed at a most proper hour. If financial embarrassment does not overtake the entertained classes there is said to be a slight possibility that they will entertain the Sophomores.

Little Pearl White's Letter.

Below is a letter written by a little granddaughter of H. C. Jackson, after the death of her little brother, which occurred a few days ago by a runaway team, near Minimum. Not wishing to disturb her grandpa in his troubles she slipped the letter in his pocket, which reads as follows: "My Dear Grandpa Jackson—I will write you a few lines to let you know we are all well and hope you are all the same. Well, grandpa my dear sweet brother is gone, but better off than we are. I will close." It seems that little Pearl White wanted to express her sympathy to her grandpa but could not in words. A FRIEND.
