He Was A Specialist.

In a confidential little talk to a group of medical students an eminent physician took up the extremely important matter of correct diagnosis of the maximum fee.

"The best rewards," he said, "come, of course, to the established specialist. For instance, I charge $25 for a call at the residence, $10 for an office consultation."

There was an appreciative and envious silence, and then a voice from the back of the amphitheater, slightly thickened, spoke:

"Doc," it asked, "how much do you charge a fellow for passing you on the street?"

A Riddle.

Seven vicious swipes the green golfer made at the ball, but it still remained perched upon the tee. He was about to make another attempt when the caddy held up his hand.

"There's a man going across in front of you, sir."

"What if he is?" snapped the novice.

"You must cry 'Fore!' if there's anybody in the way when you're going to hit the ball."

"How in thunder do I know when I'm going to hit the ball?" cried the golfer angrily.

Wouldn't Forget.

At a theater the other night a picture of life in the navy was flashed on the screen. Two women nudged each other.

"My boy's in the navy. I'm so glad I saw this," said one.

"I'm glad I saw it, too," said the other, "especially those scenes where they scrub."

"What's especially interesting about that?"

"Well, my husband's in the navy, too, and now that I know what they have to do, believe me I'll remind him when he gets home."

A Hint to Employers.

"These holiday arrangements are a nuisance!" said a business man, chatting with a friend. "I always have a bother fitting everybody in."

"It's easy for me this year," replied the other. "I have two typists and neither of them will take a holiday."

"By Jove, that's strange, isn't it?"

"Not very," laughed the friend. "You see, I recently engaged a new head clerk—a very handsome young chap—and neither of the girls is willing to go away and leave the other with a clear field."—London Answers.

WHEN FEASTING WAS REAL

How Many Can Remember the "Second Dinner" of the Good Old Holiday Times?

Allusion was made in an interesting article printed in Courant, describing an old-time Thanksgiving feast, to the second dinner of the day served on that feast at the home of every well-to-do farmer. This allusion was especially happy, inasmuch as in the past scant justice has been done to that meal which was by no means an unimportant feature of the day...

It will be remembered that the first meal was served not far from two o'clock in the afternoon, when each person was supposed to eat as on no other occasion in the year, yet by five o'clock in the afternoon, when the lamps were lighted, the table was again spread and the household with its kinsfolk and relations and the stranger within the gates, if such there was, was expected to fall to with as keen appetites as the members had two or three hours earlier. That they did not have such appetites was due solely to the weakness of the flesh, for the spirit was willing.

All the meats which figured at the first meal were displayed for the second, and pies, the very twins of those that had gone before, were on the table and, in addition, were various loaves of cake, actual loaf cake, a very durable article of food and, worst of all, each person was expected to eat heartily lest the housewife should feel that her work had not come up to its usual standard of excellence. It was a frightful ordeal.

For the Episcopalians this ordeal was repeated on Christmas day, while most of the Congregationalists waited until New Year's day, not wishing to lend color to anything approaching an observance of Christmas, but with these holidays out of the way the feasting of the year was over. For the young people of this year those great days never existed and never will exist, for the era of abundant and cheap food is definitely past, but with the older ones that memory of the imposing second dinner is bound to linger. When it existed as a fact it made thoughts of Ugolino, gnawing the skull of his enemy, of the starving men in the prison pen at Andersonville and of the fate of arctic explorers positively enviable. But those days are with the snows of yester-year; we have now dainty dishes, fine service, music of a sort, and flowers if we can pay for them, but very little actual food.—Hartford Courant.

The Lotus Festival.

It was a hot summer night, and all the shop windows were bright with lanterns shaped like the lotus buds in the big moon. The moon rose high over the curving Peking roofs and flooded the streets. As if the moon had brought him, a child came timidly forth from one of the big, dark gateways. In his hands he held a brilliant lotus bud and a lotus-bud lantern. Then from every gateway, all up and down the streets, the children came forth. The air was filled with the music of their happy voices, and there was the sound of their little feet going plop-plop in the dust.

Soon the streets were childhood's land, full of color, sound and happiness. Still the children came, rich and poor—children in silk garments of bright colors, children in rags, and little, naked, brown children, all carrying the lotus bud and the lotus-bud lanterns, which threw soft lights up into their happy, childish faces. Ever the crowd of breathless, joyous children and lovely flowers increased.

For a brief, joyous hour, like fairy elves, the children frolicked. Then the candles burned low in the lanterns, and one by one went out. As quickly as they came, the children vanished. The streets were again silent and gloomy.—From "Pioneering Where the World Is Old," by Alice Tisdale.

A Gauge.

Miss Elsie DeWolfe was talking at the New York Colony club about youth. "You can judge people's intelligence," she said, "by their attitude towards youth. I once heard a conversation between two old maids, the one intelligent, and the other stupid. As they sat in the winter garden of their Florida hotel after dinner, the stupid old maid said: 'Look at those young men and girls flirting under the date palms in the moonlight. Why should young people make such fools of themselves?' 'Maybe,' said the intelligent old maid, 'it's because they have the chance.'"

One Good Result From War.

The production on a commercial scale of helium, second only to hydrogen as the lightest gas, is not least striking of the industrial effects of the war. Though 2.13 times as heavy as hydrogen, its lifting power is only 8 per cent less in the air, and, as it is inert and non-inflammable, it supplies the means of making the airship safe. Though detected spectroscopically in the sun by Lockyer in 1868, helium was first discovered on the earth by Ramsay in 1905. It exists in all radium minerals, such as cleveite and thorite, but the small quantity that had been extracted before last year cost some thousands of dollars per cubic foot! Through the arrangements now being made, the 1 per cent of helium in natural gases will be obtained at about $100 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Six bushels of apples for 50 cents. "Cheap enough," says John Robbins, local real estate dealer, who is telling his friends how he made the exchange.

Last Sunday he and his wife were eating a country dinner with friends in Cumberland. The afternoon was tranquil and a dainty little breeze was making it very comfortable.

"Kate," says Robbins, addressing the lady of the house, "I'll just pay you 50 cents for all the apples that fall in your orchard this afternoon."

Within an hour Sunday's tempest broke into the orchard and when Robbins had cleaned up, the back end of his car was heavier by six bushels of apples.
