LAST DAY

Of the Great

$5.50

Clothing Sale!

Positively the very last chance for you to obtain any of those magnificently made SUITS and OVERCOATS in every style. Without any question they are worth more than double the money, and sold for it during the entire season. These garments compose the balance of the stock that was here when we purchased the business, and as we desire to start the season with an entirely new stock, we are closing them at this ridiculous price. But this is absolutely the last day, and we expect none to be left when we close tonight.

PRISONER FEEL IN A FIT

Stir in the Police Court During the Trial of a Case.

SHE NEVER TOLD HER STORY

Seven Hoboes Fined Last the Judge, Pleading Guilty and Received Their Sentences—Twenty-six the Total of Last Night's Round-Up in Police Circles.

Judge Kimball's procession of District offenders in police court this morning was a long one and moved slowly. Twenty-six prisoners, mostly vagrants, fought hard for their freedom, but it was an unlucky day, and the majority of them went down. John Fagan, Joseph Edwards, Robert Tompkins and Charles Hoffman, called Clerk Potts as his honor took his seat. Seven genuine "hoboes," white, black and other colors, slowly came to the front, and on being informed that they were charged with being vagrants, pleaded guilty indignantly. None of them cared to make a statement, and the usual sentence to the workhouse was imposed. Humphrey West and Ernest Jones, colored boys, were charged with vagrancy by Policeman Oriani. "I found them sleeping in an alley about 11:45 last night," said the officer. "I know both of them and they have been hanging around on my beat."

West was before his honor yesterday on the same charge, and the judge, who is always a keen observer, recognized him.

HE KNEW THE BOY.
"Step up here, boy," he said. "Why didn't you go home when I gave you an opportunity?"

"I don't know," he answered. "Ten days apiece."

Susan Hayes, colored, of Madison court, was charged by one of her neighbors with profanity. "I ain't guilty of nothing," was Susan's plea.

"She comes up to my house and curses and swears and calls me all kinds of vile names," said the complaining witness. "The other day she came after me with a fork in one hand and a black-jack in the other."

"But the charge here is profanity," broke in the court. "She was profane; that's all I want to know. Step up here, Susan, and tell your story."

"Judge, your honor," she began, "this woman is my cousin, and—"

But she broke off here with a sudden scream and fell head first to the floor in an epileptic fit. Considerable excitement resulted, and the woman was removed from the room by Bailiff Kenig and several policemen.

The judge dismissed the case without hearing any more testimony. Edward Neal, a little colored boy, about ten years of age, was charged with vagrancy by Sergt. Burroughs.

"Not guilty," answered the frightened youth. "I have had complaints from people in the neighborhood of Fifth and East Capitol streets about some boy sleeping in woodsheds around there," said the officer, "and this morning I found this boy asleep in a shed in the rear of a Chinese laundry."

"I'll see about it, boy," said Judge Kimball.

The judge took the stand and told the court that he had a letter, but kept it there last night, because a man named Ben Barnea told him he could do so. The officer said that there was no such man in the neighborhood, but his honor believed that the boy had not got up to any mischief, and after warning him not to repeat his actions took his bond.

"Are you guilty or not guilty of vagrancy?" asked the court of Patrick Harrison, an Irishman, one of the old Irishmen, who was next given a hearing.

WANTED TO BE LOCKED UP.
"O' doan' know," was the unusual reply. "What's the case, officer?" asked the judge.

"Why, this man came into the station house in Georgetown last night and asked to be locked up."

"What do you belong to?" was asked Pat. "Orange county, New York."

"Do you want to go to the workhouse?" "O' want to go somewhere, yer honor. O' want ter go home, but O' ain't able to walk."

"Take this man over to Mr. Frank's office," said the court to Policeman Harrison, "and see if he can help him on his way."

Thomas Taylor, colored, pleaded not guilty to using profane language. Policeman Harrover told the court that he was cursing and swearing and breaking down in a house on R street near Twelfth.

"Could you hear him from the outside?" asked the judge.

"Yes, sir."

"Step up, Thomas. What have you got to say?" "I went there to see a lady, sir, and I didn't use no profane language. I'm a member of de church and never swore in my life."

In spite of Thomas' statement, he was fined $5.

Then came Annie Foley, or Annie Rooney, as she is better known, an old-timer, who is far better acquainted with the workhouse than with the rest of the city. "Not guilty," was her plea. Policeman McDonald, who made the arrest, was called.

ALONE IN A BURNING HOUSE.

Three Children Had a Narrow Escape from Suffocation.

A fire which broke out yesterday afternoon at the residence of Mr. Joseph H. Nelson, 44 M street northwest, might have culminated in a large and serious blaze had it not been for the prompt assistance of Mr. Henry S. Hall, a Treasury clerk, who resides next door, and the timely arrival of the fire department. Spontaneous combustion was the origin of the fire, which started in a closet on the second floor.

At the time of the blaze there were only three little children in the house, and they were playing on the first floor.

The little tots made their way through the front door into the street and notified Mr. Hall, who lives at No. 46 M street. Mr. Hall hurried into the house from whence the smoke came, while an alarm was turned in at Box 28, by an attendant of the Homeopathic Hospital.

He bravely fought the flames and as a result his hair and moustache were singed close to the skin, while his face and neck were badly scorched.

He had aided considerably in checking the conflagration, when engines Nos. 3, 6, 7, and Truck A arrived upon the scene, and after a little difficulty finally extinguished the fire.

HIG NAVY BY SPRING.

Eight Warships Will Be Ready for Service Then.

According to progress reports made to the Navy Department with reference to the condition of naval vessels now under construction, there is a strong probability that eight new warships will be ready for service by July 1 next.

These are the battleships Massachusetts and Oregon, sisters of the Indiana, now in commission, the coast defense vessels Monmouth, Puritan and Terror, and the gunboats Nashville, Wilmington and Helena. The Monmouth is almost complete and will be placed in commission in a few weeks.

The Terror is within two per cent of completion and the Massachusetts within three per cent. Of the others the percentage of work done on them is: torpedos boats Nos. 3, 4 and 5; 22; No. 6, 20; gunboat No. 10, 5; five other gunboats less than 5; submarine torpedo boat, 5; torpedo boat No. 8, 2; No. 7, less than 3; steam tug No. 5, 20.
