SAN FRANCISCO, July 25.—"The situation in the Philippines is just what it was during the last years of the Spanish rule," said Capt. F. V. Krug, of the Twenty-second Infantry, who has just returned from eighteen months of campaigning in the islands. "The best people—the educated classes—have been convinced that the American rule is the best they could possibly have, and the fighting is all being done by roving bands of desperadoes, who are harassing the islanders for many years and levied tribute on their more fortunate neighbors and tribal enemies. In Manila and the districts in that vicinity the people are only prevented from openly joining the American cause by agents of the robber bands, who manage to creep through the lines and intimidate them by their threats to burn down their houses and places of business and to murder them in the night. Too often these threats are carried out."
