Coming of the Holiday Has Little Effect on Early Business.

Grangers and Antitrust Securities Features - Near Belief That the Strike is Near Its End.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—The stock market this morning was little different from that of yesterday, business being dull and speculation narrow for the most part.

London was firm but the American market was featureless. There were no new developments affecting the market. The strike situation remained practically unchanged, though Wall Street was more than ever convinced that the end of the fight is very near at hand.

The coming of the three-day holiday did not cause the liquidation that had been looked for in some quarters.
