A TRIO OF PLAY ROOMS

Ruth and Esther Have Three Pretty Nurseries.

Marriage of Miss Harvey and Mr. Van Kuren—Senator and Mrs. Gray Much Feted in London.

The President's oldest daughter, little Miss Ruth, has already attained to the distinction of riding a bicycle. Her accomplishment in this line was attained some time before leaving Washington, but it is not likely that during the present summer she will have any of this kind of exercise, owing to the fact that her own special bicycle still remains at the White House. Her appearance in the now dismantled and deserted upper corridors of the Executive Mansion seems only to make the feeling of desolation more complete.

It has been stowed away under one of the large pier tables that are affixed to either side of the main corridor up-stairs, and there it is likely to remain until the President's family return in the autumn, when it is likely they will go to Woodley to remain until the cold weather renders riding in and out each day rather too uncomfortable.

Little Misses Ruth and Esther are unusually blessed in the matter of nurseries, since they have no less than three well-stocked ones in which they reign supreme. The toys sent on occasions of Christmas and Easter, not to take into account those that arrive at the White House indiscriminately during the year, are more than sufficient to stock these three nurseries.

The one at the White House is, of course, the most important and has more historical associations, did the little ones but know it, since it is located in what is generally known as the Prince of Wales' room. All winter it is filled with suitable whatever there is a bit of sunshine abroad, Mrs. Cleveland selected it for the children's nursery on account of the warm southern exposure, and during the winter months, formerly the late Mrs. Harrison's bedroom, in which the nurses sleep.

Next in importance after the nursery at the White House is the nursery at Woodley. In the latter, truth to tell, the majority of belongings and toys are taken out each season from the headquarters at the White House, while the nursery at Woodley is the portion of the time the nursery abandoned by the children for the pleasures of an out-of-door life, but on cold rainy days it is a place filled with delight for the little ones.

There at the door every morning, just as he does at the White House, comes the President's oldest daughter, little Ruth, and taking Ruth up in his arms carries her down to breakfast, where her chair is always placed next to his own. Often the President himself prepares the breakfast for his little daughter, doing so in preference to consigning this duty to any else. Frequently, when Ruth was much smaller, the President sat at the table, but even went to the extent of feeding her every mouthful.

The third nursery of the Cleveland children is the one at Gray Gables, but that, like the one at their country place at Woodley, is seldom used, and is reserved for the children and taken Ruth up in his arms carries her down to breakfast, where her chair is always placed next to his own. Often the President himself prepares the breakfast for his little daughter, doing so in preference to consigning this duty to any else. Frequently, when Ruth was much smaller, the President sat at the table, but even went to the extent of feeding her every mouthful.

They have every kind of little carriage and go-cart, in which, when they desire, they can be rolled about the grounds at Buzzard's Bay.

When Ruth returns in the autumn she will resume her bicycle practice in the grounds at the south of the White House.

NINETY-ONE WERE WOMEN

One Hundred Applicants Examined for the Printing Office.

GETTING AN ELIGIBLE LIST

Civil Service Commission Feared the Labor of Classifying the Big Workshop, But It Has Turned Out an Easy Task—Practical Questions Put Those Who Are Skilled.

The practical application of the civil service system to the Government Printing Office has followed swift upon the heels of the President's order directing the extension, and the list of classified workers under the government has since yesterday embraced the employes of the biggest printing establishment in the world.

The first examination of applicants for appointment under the new rules was held yesterday, when one hundred persons who desire minor places, passed through the ordeal. Ninety-one of these were women, and the class of work in the department to which, upon appointment, they will be assigned is done in large measure by representatives of that sex.

SKILLED LABOR CLASS. There will probably be about one hundred and twenty-five applicants before the commission to-day, which will complete the examinations in the skilled labor class, and will also include from twelve to sixteen bookbinders.

The compositors will be examined tomorrow, and all others, including the electrotypers, stereotypers, machinists, proof-readers, engineers, embracing half a dozen classifications, will be postponed until the proper questions can be prepared and the papers for the examinations is to provide an eligible list for the use of the public printer for persons to fill vacancies.

Anybody coming within the rules of the service may apply for examination, and an extensive list of names will be made, the same given upon the eligible list, as in other branches where the civil service prevails, and one year is given in which to secure a position.

Those examined yesterday did not have a very difficult set of questions to answer nor a very severe ordeal to undergo. The applicants upon appointment will be expected to serve as leaders, correctors, rollers, counters, and in other similar positions, and they were required as a test of fitness to exhibit a knowledge of elementary arithmetic and orthography, and present a specimen of penmanship by an exercise in copying.

LITTLE TO BE WRITTEN. Qualifications were in part determined by requiring a letter to be written, addressed to the commission, in which the full name, age, residence, and past experience were noted, and in addition each applicant was called upon to answer such questions as were applicable to the duties of the position.

No other examination will be required of this class, and in this they are somewhat fortunate than those of other grades. Supplementarily to the written examination, the electrotypers, stereotypers, bookbinders, compositors, and others will be subjected to a practical test in the office work, under the direction of a board of experts selected to assist the commission.

These experts, who were designated by the Public Printer, made suggestions for the guidance of the commission in the preparation of the examination questions.

Under the law, those now in office are exempt from examination, and all persons without personal disqualifications of misconduct are eligible for reappointment without examination within one year from the date of such separation. Formerly discharged soldiers and the widows of soldiers are, under the same rule, entitled to a restoration without limit as to date of dismissal.

At the same time these preferred persons have the privilege of entering the competitive list, and if the examination be successfully passed, they have a chance for promotion in the form of a list. Many avail themselves of this opportunity.

It will probably be ten days or two weeks before the making of the papers returned from the present examination is completed.

OFFICIALS ARE PLEASED. "For a time we dreaded the task of classifying the Government Printing Office," said Chief Engineer Webster, yesterday evening, "but we have found it to be one of the easiest of the departments, and are greatly pleased to have it in our hands."

"It has given us less trouble than has the classification of the Internal Revenue bureau," he added. "That service has involved a good deal of work, but the greater part of it has naturally fallen upon the collectors. There are no applicants from six of the sixty-three districts in the country, but there is a list of applicants that contains about twelve hundred names, and we are just now about to enter upon the examinations."

Major Webster spoke with much pleasure of the success with which the law had been made to apply to the Government Printing Office. He said the civil service system has been extended quite as rapidly as the present force can accomplish the work. The appropriation provides for a force that cannot be increased except by authority of Congress, and he felt he was actually able to take in any considerable addition to the classified list without adding to the clerical assistance.

AFTER THEIR LEGACIES. Children's and Garfield Hospitals Sue Mrs. Manly's Executors. A suit in equity was filed yesterday afternoon by the Children's Hospital of the District of Columbia and Garfield Memorial Hospital, through their attorneys, Messrs. Peabody and McCausland, against Louis D. Lovett and J. Carson. The defendants are sued as executors of the late Mrs. Anna M. Manly, and the object of the action is to subject certain funds in the defendants' hands to the payment of legacies given to the two petitioning institutions.

Emma L. Bresser, the benevolent benefactor of the hospitals, made her will on March 26, 1882, and on January 12, 1901, passed a codicil in the form of a letter, making a bequest of $50,000 for the erection and maintenance of a grammar hospital for poor and destitute women on the grounds now occupied by the Garfield Hospital. She also gave $25,000 to the Children's Hospital, Chadwell, located at Anna Manly, a sister of Mrs. Bresser, were named as executors.

Mrs. Bresser died on July 20, 1892, and by a peculiar coincidence her sister, Mrs. Manly, who is also remembered for her charity, died on the same day as her sister. Her executors were Louis D. Lovett and J. Carson.

Mrs. Manly was given $15,000 by her will to the Children's Hospital, a better portion in the case to subject it to a proportionate part payment of the legacies left to them. The remainder of the legacies are the property of Mrs. Manly's estate in Philadelphia, her home when living.
