BLIND MOTHER DESERTED

Seven-Year-Old Clarence White Also Took All Her Money.

The Poor Woman Was Led Here From Virginia by Her Little Son, Who Flew From Her in the Night.

An aged blind woman with tears in her sightless eyes, called at police headquarters last night and beseeched Detective Sergeant Perry and Detective Joe Carter to help her find her missing boy. She gave her name as Sarah White, of Danville, Va., and said her son was Clarence White, seven years of age.

He ran away from her Wednesday night while she was lodging at the Central Union Mission. The boy left about midnight and disappeared, taking all the money she had and leaving his blind mother alone, and helpless in a strange city.

Mother and son came here on an excursion Wednesday. In the evening she called on Sanitary Officer Frank at the District building. She related a piteous tale of how she had been living in poverty in the Virginia city, and by skimping made both ends meet. She decided to come on a trip to Washington, accounts of which she had heard in newspapers, read from the newspapers. With her eyes she could never hope to behold the beauties of the National Capital, but she wanted her children to see it all, and she would die content.

Several months rolled around, and at last sufficient money to procure passage for herself and son on a cheap excursion to Washington, given by a religious society of Danville. Guided by her seven-year-old son, and trusting implicitly to him, the blind mother started out. After many vicissitudes and narrow escapes, the two wandered into Sanitary Frank's office. The gray-haired woman told her tale, and asked to be directed to the Central Union Mission. She stayed there with her boy until Thursday morning.

On awakening that day she found that he had disappeared, carrying with him his mother's all, $3.10 in change, which she had in a pocketbook.

"You will know Clarry the minute you come across him," said the sorrowful old lady to the officers. "He had six toes on each foot when he was born, and six fingers on each hand, but I had a physician take off the extra fingers and toes. You can identify him by the amputation marks."

"What sort of a looking boy is he?" asked Sergeant Perry.

"Oh, sir, he is as pretty as a picture," she said, with a sigh. "I have never seen my boy because I am blind, but I have heard people say he was so beautiful."

The detectives furnished the blind mother with a hearty dinner and in company with two kind-hearted little boys, who volunteered to guide her, she started for the first precinct station, where she spent the night. The detectives believe the missing lad is in Baltimore, as he had expressed to his mother a desire to go there.

Used a Cobble-stone.
William Campbell, colored, was arrested last night by Policeman Yee and taken to the Eighth precinct station house on the charge of assaulting Charles H. Johnson, also colored, with a cobble-stone. The arrest was made on a warrant sworn out by Johnson.
