PROCTOR IS EXONERATED The Commissioners Approve the Findings of the Trial Board.

MR. TRUEDELL'S REVIEW Detective Acted in Obedience to Orders of His Superior Officer and Only Employed Methods Customary in Such Cases—Change in Police Manual Suggested.

The District Commissioners yesterday approved the findings of the trial board upon the investigation made into the charges against Detective Charles W. Proctor, in the Maxwell case, for the enforcement of the Edmunds law.

The trial board returned Proctor "not guilty," and the action of the Commissioners exonerates him from blame, upon the grounds that he was acting under orders of his superior officer, in accordance with the manual, and strictly in line with his duty as an officer detailed to perform detective duty.

It is also a conclusion that he should not be held responsible for the law which he attempted to enforce, nor for the checks to enforce it on the part of those whose duty it was to do so by the usual "only effective means employed in such cases."

Commissioner Truedell reviewed the testimony at great length, prefacing it with the remark that on account of the sensational character of the case, and the great public interest it has excited, also because of the voluminous and conflicting character of much of the testimony, he felt it necessary to give the matter most careful consideration.

MR. TRUEDELL'S REVIEW After setting the charges in detail Mr. Truedell says the theory upon which the prosecution was conducted was that "Proctor was not only guilty of all that was charged in the specifications, but that he had been a close friend of Main's," referring to the man whom the detective was alleged to have cooperated with in the raid made at Main's house upon the promiscuous by Maxwell and his companion, Miss Fyann. It was in the enforcement of the Edmunds law that the midnight visit was made to Maxwell's room.

The chute at Alexander Island has always been very unpopular with the public for the reason that it is such a easy matter to "job" races that are run out of it. If all the events were run on the circular track, it would please all hands, with the possible exception of those who profit by the "jobs."
