Bowling Green, Ky., Oct. 24.—Hon. John G. Carlisle, Secretary of the Treasury, spoke here this evening to an audience which overflowed the opera house into the streets.

The scene in the opera house was entirely different to that at Covington. No attempt was made to molest the speaker beyond a few shouts for Bryan and Rice, the Third District Democratic nominee for Congress.

Mr. Carlisle spoke for an hour and twenty-five minutes. Immediately after he finished speaking he was surrounded by the Democratic candidate for Congress in the Third District, undertook to answer him in the public park. He was very bitter in his denunciation of Mr. Carlisle.

OLD SOLDIERS DISAPPEARS

Was on a Visit to Sons Here From the Hampton Home.

They Received a Telegram Saying He Had Arrived There, But It Proves to Be a Forgery.

The police have been requested to ascertain the whereabouts of John F. Street, an old soldier and an inmate of the home at Hampton, who disappeared from the city mysteriously on or about the 20th of last month.

It has been the habit for Street, who for some years past had his children in this city once every three months and in accordance with this custom he was here last month on an attempt to visit with a married son, Mr. F. W. Street, residing at No. 607 Elm street northwest.

Being a cripple, the old man spent most of his time in bed, and it is thought that a stroll would be beneficial, and taking his crutch and cane, started out, nodding a cheery assent to his wife's suggestion regarding the dinner hour.

Dinner that day witnessed the old man a chair empty, but his children gave him no serious thought, concluding that he had gone to visit another son, who lives in the northeastern part of the city.

A week went by before the thought of making inquiry presented itself, and then, when young Mr. Street visited his brother and learned that their father had been seen at his home, he was surprised to find that the old man had been at the Elm street house, the police were notified.

The patrolmen kept a sharp lookout for the old man, and when he was relieved of the care by a dispatch from Hampton to the effect that Street had reached there and all was well. This was on the 26th of last month.

The anxiety of the Streets found succor in the dispatch and they gave not a thought to the peculiar circumstance of their father's sudden and apparently unexplained disappearance.

Last night a gentleman who said his name was W. Street called at the Third precinct station house and recalled the above-mentioned circumstances, adding that he was in receipt of a letter from the old man at Hampton, inquiring about the older Mr. Street, asking for information as to his present whereabouts, and concluding with the statement that he had not been heard from since his departure for this city last month.

The missing man is described as being about 60 years of age, rather stout, dark complexion, iron gray hair and mustache. He wears the regulation army blue clothing of the home.

He is in his possession considerable money and a handsome gold watch and chain. The fact that he had valuables on his person has led his people here to suspect that he is a forger.

Street, the son, will leave tomorrow for Hampton to begin a thorough investigation.

SIPS BALOONS SENT UP

New York Harbor the Scene of a Unique Parade.

FIRE BALOONS SENT UP

Over Two Hundred Boats Participated in the Affair—A Pyrotechnic Display That Exceeded Anything Yet Seen in the Metropolis—An Immense Crowd Present.

New York, Oct. 24.—The most unique marine spectacle ever seen in this harbor took place here tonight. It was a magnificent display, participated in by two hundred different crafts, and witnessed by an immense crowd of people.

The events were the national "Grand Fireworks Display, Illumination and Marine Parade" of the Shipping and Industrial Society. For an hour or more the air was filled with a flood of brilliant lights and dazzling colors, showers of burning stars, torrents of golden sprays, red, white, blue, and green, and, for the time, lighted to have turned into rain.

The pyrotechnic feature of the evening was carried out on an elaborate scale. It began with a salute of 101 cannon guns, followed by an illumination of the harbor with 500 colored lights, an ascension of twenty-four balloons, and powerful magnesium lights which lit up the city; colossal fire pictures of McKinley and Hobart, "umbrellas" of fire, illuminated kites, floating festoons of lights, and a shower of fireworks in the sky.

The night was clear and cold when the parade began its formation at 7 o'clock. Steam cranes only participated. The fleet was in four divisions, the first in command being Admiral Stages, second Rear Admiral Dalzell, third Rear Admiral Moore, and fourth Rear Admiral Valentin; the whole under command of Admiral J. W. Miller.

These titles, of course, were political, conferred on the occasion. The four divisions were composed of four squadrons, each squadron in command of a commodore. The admirals' staff, elaborate in numbers, was composed of representatives of navigation, interest, and Commodore Michael Moran, a well-known vessel owner, was in charge of the flying squadron of seven speedy tugs.

FORMATION OF THE FLEET. The fleet was formed at the lower end of the Battery, about 10 o'clock, and divided into four divisions. The first and largest division was on the west side and the second and fourth on the east side of the river. All divisions formed in column of vessels heading down stream.

The preparatory signal was fired from the flagship at 8 p. m., and immediately the fleet started on its way. The parade proceeded to midstream. After a short delay, amid the blowing of whistles and a flood of pyrotechnics, the parade started.

The parade was six miles long, and to facilitate navigation and prevent accident, there was a distance of 300 yards between divisions and 200 yards between squadrons.

WITH 101 GUNS. When the fleet of the parade was abreast of Grant's tomb the fireworks program was begun, by a salute of 101 guns, followed by bombs, rockets, etc. The display was continued until 11 o'clock, and as they passed down the river there were more fireworks from anchored boats at Westchester, Stevens' Point, Fort Greene street, Hoboken, and the Battery.

Every boat had its own supply of pyrotechnics, and kept up a continual increase in Republic's popularity and the reviewing party were assembled.

After passing the reviewing vessel, the larger craft passed under Governor's Island, through the Narrows, and toward the smaller up the East River, keeping near the Brooklyn shore as far as East Thirty-fourth street, the squadron being dispersed after passing the reviewing boat.

GREAT FIREWORKS DISPLAY. It was 9:15 p. m. when the head of the line reached the reviewing boat Aurora of the Battery. The arrival of the fleet was greeted with a grand fireworks demonstration on the New York side.

Mr. Hobart said after the parade had ended: "It was a magnificent demonstration. Nothing like it has ever been here before in political campaigns." The steamboats and other vessels in the parade, and the fireworks on shore, and the number of buildings illuminated, reflected a general interest in the success of the Republican ticket.

Some Stores Can Undersell All Others

and yet make as much money. It all depends on the size of the business. If the business—like this business—is big enough to run its own factory—and handle the entire productions of several cloth mills—and command enough ready cash to take advantage of all the concessions that ready cash constantly wins—it has a decided advantage over every other store in the community.

We are the only manufacturing clothiers in Washington—and no other store here will name our prices for the same class of clothing.

"High-grade clothing at fair prices"—where else can you find it? Money back.

SUITS.

If we weren't manufacturers you couldn't have any $7.50 suits—that is—such suits as you can have now.

Whatever kind you want you'll find here—and at a saving. A whole lot full of overcoats to pick from—and they're the nicest you ever saw "ready-to-wear."

Overcoats. Whatver kind you want you'll find here—and at a saving. A whole lot full of overcoats to pick from—and they're the nicest you ever saw "ready-to-wear."

HATS. We want you to get into the habit of coming here for Hats just as you do for clothing.

UNDERWEAR. Gloves and Underwear will probably be your next furnishing needs.
