

THE MUSIC WORLD.

Andrew Carnegie's Observations Upon Musical Matters.

LITTLE ORGANS VS. BIG ORGANS.

The Imperative Need for a Good Instrument in Pittsburgh.

GOSSIP ABOUT OUR LOCAL MUSICIANS

In the many discussions of Mr. Andrew Carnegie's observations upon musical matters in Pittsburgh, contained in THE DISPATCH interview of some ten days since, the matter of an organ for the Carnegie Library and Music Hall, in Allegheny, has naturally received less attention...

"Large organs are now voted a mistake. Organ recitals are not attractive. I met Mr. Chickering and Mr. Damschroch at Bar Harbor last week, and they are an accompaniment, in best, and this is the decision come to in regard to our music hall in New York."

An issue is here clearly raised as between an organ for solo use and one designed especially for accompanimental purposes. If this issue be ultimately decided in favor of the latter side—the above words would seem to make quite probable—there would be material differences both in size and in specifications between the organ erected and the organ really needed.

It is doubtless true that another large organ for recital purposes is not at all needed in New York, and that such an one is not a desideratum for the new music hall which Mr. Carnegie is so largely helping to conduct the Oratorio Society there. Conductor Damschroch, of course, wants the instrument for accompaniment, and Mr. Chickering has very likely four or five profit from recitals upon the organ in the hall that bears his name. The reason for all this lies in the fact that the metropolis already has a number of complete organs in the churches, and recitals—most of them in the churches, whose authorities are liberal-minded enough to see no harm in using a consecrated edifice for recital and evening music, even on week days. Organ recitals, scores of them, are given each season in the New York churches. Judging from the attendance, they are decidedly attractive, too. But, of course, the main reason for their being open, there is little or no demand for recitals elsewhere.

In Pittsburgh, however, the conditions are radically different. The churches in this city in the rarest instances, permit their instruments to be utilized in this way. Indeed, most of them refuse even to allow deserving students to practice. There is only one organ in the city available for general use in either practice or recital; and that lonesome organ is very far from being complete, beside being usually more or less out of order.

As the inevitable result of such conditions, organ music here stands just about at the foot of the list, the "King of Instruments" reigns but in the scullery. The overwhelming majority of our regular concert goers, those most interested in music of any species, have never heard a single organ recital and are destitute of any true conception of the full capabilities of the instrument. Knowing nothing better, these good folk in their respective churches are content to listen Sunday after Sunday to the lame and impotent efforts of a brood of amateur organists (this comes perilously near home!) who, even if they are capable of better things, have neither incentive nor opportunity to attain to them.

The crying, active need of this whole important department of music in Pittsburgh in the presence of an organ, as complete as possible in some place, where it can be utilized, on the one hand, by our organ players in actual practice and in learning what a properly balanced organ really is; and, on the other hand, in the giving of recitals by first-class concertists, so as to show students and the people at large what good organ playing and good organ music really is.

It is a pity that when Roosevelt's representative stepped over the other day en route for Chicago (where the largest organ in the country is to be put into the huge auditorium), it was too late to build an organ in time for the opening of the Carnegie library building. The commission could not tell until a few weeks ago whether there would be enough money left in their hands to pay for an organ. On finding that there would be, Mr. Elliott had them made the contract with Mr. Eibert had they not been determined to have no unfinished work on their hands at the time of turning over the building to the city. A $10,000 or $12,000 instrument, such as was talked of, would admirably fill the bill in a hall seating 1,200 persons.

Be it devoutly hoped that an organ of at least that size and quality, well balanced and fully equipped for recital purposes, may be erected in the new hall—and that right speedily—whether by the commission, the city, or the donor himself.

In subscribing for 50 of the $10 associate memberships in the Mozart club and distributing the same among its clerks, Mr. Carnegie has made the best kind of a beginning as a patron saint of music in Pittsburgh.

It is really better than if he had given the club a big lump sum, or had absolutely guaranteed all its expenses. Such aid helps the club along on an entirely new path. It is stimulating, not stunning; encouraging, not enervating. Especially when coupled with assurances of Mr. Carnegie's personal interest in the club, with advice to "plan big," and with the request to be kept informed of the club's progress and needs from time to time. Assistance of this kind needs incite the members of the club to put forth their own best efforts to make the season successful. It sets an example that the men might well follow, and does not relieve local music-lovers from the duty of supporting their own leading society. In this, in other benefactions, Mr. Carnegie's help is of practical nature that develops the greatest usefulness by requiring its recipients to share in helping themselves.

By the way, in the Mozart Club's plans for the season, it is to be hoped that the matter of analytical or descriptive programmes is receiving attention. Such aids to the appreciation and enjoyment of their concerts should no longer be neglected. No doubt Mr. Wilson, Mr. Kreibbiel or some of the other Eastern critics who constantly do this sort of thing, could be written the programmes for a fee that could be regained out of their sale at the concerts.

Crochets and Quavers. Mr. CARL MARENZ returned yesterday from a lengthy European tour, just in time to be stationed at the announcement that he was to remain in Germany all winter.

The Church Choral Union, under conductor W. J. Lafferty, will be starting after a season's rest, the first meeting being announced for the 7th inst., in the Fourth U. P. Church, Allegheny.

Mr. GURWAY HENNING, the well-known conductor, will make New York his headquarters for this season, and will receive pupils for the operatic stage. Evidently Philadelphia did not entirely restore the losses suffered in Boston by Mr. Henning and his talented troupe.

The Boston Quartet Club, comprising Messrs. Carl Rester, George and Fred G. Toorge and Charles F. Cooper, will give a series of five chamber-music matinees in Hillman's music and art chamber. The first date is in October 3d. Mrs. W. B. Wolfe and Miss Agnes Vogel will be the singers.

A BUST OF MRS. CLEVELAND

Left in Charge of Ex-Marshal and Mrs. Wilson, of Washington.

SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH. WASHINGTON, September 28.—Ex-Marshal and Mrs. Wilson are back from Saratoga and Long Branch. It is discovered that a beautiful white marble bust of Mrs. Cleveland, upon a pedestal of black and white marble, is at present occupying a corner of Mrs. Wilson's drawing room. It was left in the ex-Marshal's charge when Mr. Cleveland went to New York. The bust is life size, and is the work of G. Scahill, Genoa, and bears date 1886. It was made from impressions taken when, as Mrs. Wilson, she traveled in Europe. The marble represents the head and shoulders, showing the chest midway, the hair is dressed in the style that is now most familiar to the public as that worn in photos extant of this popular young lady of the White House, in a coil on the top of the head, with large curls about the forehead and smaller ones on the nape of the neck. The features are idealized and the form is slight. The engraving is a knitted undergarment made with a square opening at the neck, edged with Hamburg trimming, and a knitted shawl falling from the shoulders in a full, ruffled edge of the White House, in a coil on the top of the head, with large curls about the forehead and smaller ones on the nape of the neck. A VERY BAD WRECK.

But the Number of Killed is Not so Large as at First Feared—The Sad End of a Bridal Tour to the East.

CANAJOHARA, N. Y., September 28.—The first anticipations as to the extent of the disaster at Palatine Bridge have not been realized, but the reality is bad enough. Four persons were killed outright and a number injured more or less. The saddest and most terrible part of the accident befell William H. Manning, his wife and party. Mr. Manning resided at Marquette, Mich., and a few weeks ago came East to Westport, N. Y., where he married Miss Julia Davis, a wealthy and beautiful young lady. They had passed a few weeks of their honeymoon in the East, and yesterday started for their new home, where an elegantly furnished house awaited them. They were accompanied by Sadie Heyd, a maid from the city, and George W. Allen, a man servant. Mr. Manning was injured internally and was badly disfigured about his face. He was cut out of his berth and sent forward, where he seemed to rest easily.

The physicians encouraged him, and his big, black eyes glistened with delight that he was likely to come through alive. He was taken out and laid beside the track, and died soon after. His wife, who is a beautiful little lady, took everything calmly. She was carried to the next berth to that of her husband and clearly stated her condition. She said "I am all right, look after Will and Sadie." She was not all right, however, as her head is injured and she is otherwise hurt, but not fatally. Sadie never spoke after the crash. Her remains were dug out and laid beside the track, and tenderly covered. The man servant escaped injury in his upper berth.

Following are the names of the persons killed in the wreck: REV. PRENTICE DIVE, of Dayton, O.; evidently a railway official, as he had a pocket full of papers; aged about 60 years. SAIDIE BOYD, of Westport, N. Y.; a maid of Mr. Manning and wife; aged about 24 years. CHARLES FRANKLIN, a porter of the Erie road, aged about 28 years. WILLIAM H. MANNING, a real estate dealer, of Marquette, Mich.

The injured are: MRS. W. H. MANNING, formerly Miss Julia Davis, of Westport. She is injured about the head. MISS SARA, of Fredonia; back hurt and face cut. She was returning to her home from Brockport. ENGINEER HORTH, of Albany; both legs broken and otherwise injured. R. A. FOWLER, a lumber dealer at the East river, near Fifty-third street, New York; concussion of the spine and otherwise seriously injured. WILLIAM H. McDEVROY and J. H. LEWIS, of the same location, were also injured. W. H. ENGLAND, of the Union Press Exchange, New York; injured slightly. Several others were injured slightly, and there were many other starting and hair-breadth escapes.

PROHIBITION IS SETTLED. Not Many Foreigners Are Becoming Citizens These Days. The Republican County Committee met yesterday afternoon in Common Council Chamber and was presided over by Chairman Porter. It was a regular monthly meeting. The Chairman of the different Sub-Committees reported that they were making every preparation for the coming election. The Naturalization Committee reported that there were but few applications for naturalization; this was caused by the recent prohibition campaign when a great many citizens were made.

ACCIDENTAL DEATH. It Was Proven That the West Penn Hospital Ambulance Was on Time. Coroner McDowell yesterday held an inquest on Patrick O'Hara, who died at the West Penn Hospital, from the effects of injuries received on the Pittsburgh, Virginia and Charleston road, near Homestead. The main question for determination was the cause of the delay in summoning the ambulance wagon. Special Officer Pender denied that he had telephoned twice before an ambulance was sent. Superintendent Cowan, of the West Penn Hospital, said that owing to the absence of the regular driver of the wagon, one of the doctors was sent in his place. The message was received at 9 o'clock and the ambulance reached the Union station at 10 o'clock. No additional messages were received after the ambulance had started.
