Discussion of Fundamental Principles in Piano Technique.

NEW PROFESSIONAL ORCHESTRA.

The Chopin Recital by Vladimir de Pachman Friday Evening.

HAPPENINGS IN MUSICAL CIRCLES

It has never been intended to make this department of THE DISPATCH merely a chronicle or even a critical review of musical happenings here and elsewhere.

It is pleasant to have this attitude recognized by one of our most thoughtful musicians, who sends in, unsolicited, an article of a distinctly educational character, with the intimation that a few similar ones may follow.

In general, tone is the crude material of music. A sequence of individual tones with definite relations of pitch is the practical (tonal) material of music. The piano tone is produced by the percussive effect of a hammer upon a taut wire.

Necessarily, then, in any degree modify the tone we must proportionately modify the stroke, and we find that by more or less elevation above the key, or contraction of muscle, more or less volume of tone is produced.

We then state as our first proposition: The stroke of the key is the immediate cause of the tone, and the least modification of this stroke produces a corresponding change in the tone.

But variety in unity is the axiom of art, having its most perfect illustration in the modern orchestra. The individual notes must be as varied as possible, as great equipment, in tonal power, variety as variety in the stroke of the key can produce any variety in the tonal effect.

There, then, to the piano student the one problem of study is found in the manifold ways in which the key may be struck to produce manifold musical results. In so far as these "ways" have been evolved and classified, we have a scientific method of touch, or tone formation.

The study of piano technique consists in the apprehension of one and another of these "touches": the practice of the piano in the conscious selection and application of the chosen touch to a passage whose proper musical effect is a primary, not an inevitable result of using the proper touch.

No student should spend one moment in piano practice that is not used in the conscious selection and repeated application of a specific method to the passage in hand. Present methods of touch are so complex that he who has mastered them as a scientific method will be ready for that final evolution in the quality and dependence where the immediate artistic impulse almost unconsciously selects the proper technical method.

Ignorance of such complex and ultimate methods is fatal to the pupil's progress. If the instructor is not a conscientious and ultimate teacher of the method, he is to be pitied, not the student.

Finally, if you won't take the pains to do these things for yourself, you deserve to fail and deserve a poor teacher.

REVERIDGE WESTER.

Another attempt has been made to accomplish what has been long and consistently advocated in this column as the best practicable step toward Pittsburgh's orchestral development.

namely, the voluntary association of the professional players themselves into a complete, permanent orchestra, demonstrating what they can do with regular rehearsals of high class music and with this increasing and being to create a more general demand for the services of a full orchestra in our concert rooms.

On Thursday morning, at Old City Hall, 40 of our best professional musicians met and organized upon exactly these lines. The Philadelphia conductor of the Bijou Theater Orchestra, was called to the podium, and several important works were placed in rehearsal. Meetings are to be held every two weeks for the present. It is expected that the membership will include at least 50 players. There is no present prospect of engagement nor of remuneration; the first consideration is improvement in ensemble playing and familiarity with standard scores.

Such things have been tried before and have failed through lack of interest or dissension among the members. The time is certainly ripe for Pittsburgh to play an orchestra worthy the name. It will not do for the players to sit around waiting for some local Higginson to turn up with a big gun, and then to be less will do to wait idly for the growth of a general public demand for an orchestra, when the people don't know they want one and couldn't find one here if they did.

Too only practicable plan is to have one which has been adopted. And it is practicable. As in Detroit and other cities, the players will find patronage and support in an increasing measure, according as they prove themselves capable and worthy. Gentlemen, the eyes of the community are upon you; do not let your hands to the plow and then turn back!

Pachman's Chopin Recital at Old City Hall next Friday evening is, of course, the event of the week. The programme was printed last week. The following extract from a review printed in the London Times several years ago, gives an idea of the player's special fitness for interpreting such a selection of compositions: "Chopin—as his Pittsburgh programme commences—"

But M. de Pachman is greatest—he is, in fact, unique when he has to deal with Chopin. Field somewhat coarsely called Chopin a faded de chambre de musique, and there is this truth in the remark, that Chopin's artistic genius sometimes reaches a degree which, to a robust mind, may never appear. Every turn of phrasing, every modulation, the very shakings, quiverings and tremors are in Chopin marked by distinctive individuality which no other composer has imitated, and which few have even tried to imitate. All the M. de Pachman renders with a perfection of style and with a degree of poetic insight which only the only artist's most absolute harmony between composer and interpreter, and which fully explains the marvellous opinion of those who have heard him play his own music, that M. de Pachman is, in doubt, to some extent, explained by the pianist's slavish nature; for, in fact, this implies a distinct individual gift, as the artist's part. This gift, at the same time, explains the secret of M. de Pachman's success. It is that individual genius which seems to grow rarer and rarer in the same measure as the mere mechanism of the art becomes more common."

BIDDING TWO STATES.

The Ceremonies on Opening a Bridge From Missouri to Illinois.

St. Louis, May 3.—The St. Louis Merchants' bridge was formally opened today with brilliant ceremonies. A special train bearing Governor Francis and staff, the officers of the Merchants' Bridge and Terminal Railway Company and invited guests, left Union depot for the bridge at 1:30 P. M.

Ten minutes after the arrival of the train bearing Governor Francis and staff reached the center of the bridge, a special bearing Governor Prior, of Illinois, accompanied by his staff and many prominent Illinoisans, came alongside from the Illinois shore, and the two Governors met and clasped hands on the center span amid the plaudits of the onlookers, the screaming of whistles and the booming of cannon.

Then Miss Josephine Cobb, daughter of Seth W. Cobb, president of the bridge company, hoisted the Stars and Stripes, and baptized the new structure by breaking a bottle of wine on the rails. The special trains then crossed to the Missouri side, where addresses were made by Governors Francis and Prior, congratulating their respective States upon this new link between the two States.

ANOTHER ENGLISH SYNDICATE

Is Said to Capture the Sewer Pipe Factories in West Virginia.

SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.—NEW CUMBERLAND, May 3.—There seems to be no doubt now that the English syndicate will take the sewer pipe factories for which they have been negotiating. All the statements furnished by them have been verified, and under the articles of agreement they would be virtually compelled to take the factories.

COAL FAMINE THREATENED.

Jeopardy Without Fuel Through Miners' Labor Disruptions.

JOLIET, May 3.—This city is threatened with a coal famine. The local dealers have a shortage of soft coal, there not being a four days' supply on hand. Orders that have been sent to the mines, especially to the Northern coal district, have not been filled, the answer being that the mines are closed down for ten days, if not longer.

ANOTHER CASUS BELLI

It is Not Certain Who is Responsible for the Schooner.

BOSTON, May 3.—A Gloucester dispatch to the Globe says that Oakes & Foster have received word from U. S. Consul Molloy at St. Johns, N. F., that the captain and crew of the schooner Howard Holbrook were convicted of violating the bait act and the vessel, with license and cargo, has been confiscated. Nothing has been received from the captain and crew, who are supposed to be imprisoned.

An Unlooked-For Find.

SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.—BEDFORD, May 3.—Charles Price, while digging post holes yesterday, found the body of a female child. The inquest showed that she had been buried about six weeks and born alive. Investigations will be made.

The Ghastly Record

Of deaths that result from Malaria is frightful. There is no disease that is so insidious in its attack. Its approach is stealthy and it permeates every fibre of the body, and remains, which if applied at the outset, by delay loses their power. Dr. Tull's Liver Pills have proven the most valuable Malarial Antidote ever discovered. A noted city physician of New York announces them "the greatest blessing of the nineteenth century," and says "in these days of defective plumbing and sewer gas, no family should be without Dr. Tull's Liver Pills. They are pleasant to take, being covered with a vanilla sugar coating."
