

THE ISSUES OF 1872.—The Charleston (S. C.) Republican says: "Tariff, civil service reform, and kindred questions, will undoubtedly have something to do with 1872, but after all, these will be minor showing in that contest. The great questions, talk as we may now, will be the very same, modified of course by events, but the same questions that have been great in the past—on the one hand the carrying forward by the Republicans of the grand policy of giving equal rights to all, of meeting all the obligations of the nation, whether in the bestowment and securing of civil rights to all her children, colored or white, or whether in paying the national indebtedness—on the other hand the Democratic party fighting, not for conquest of ideas, not for progress in liberty and fair play, not for placing high the credit of the nation, but simply for the place of power."

"In that contest affairs in the South are to be the one prominent question. All others will dwarf beside this. The Democrats will then have to make answer for the organization and continuance of the Ku-Klux Klan, and their tens of thousands of outrages. How will they answer? Looking at this matter as dispassionately as we can, we believe that the Democrats, even if they ever had a chance of winning in 1872, have flung that chance away by the point of the dagger in the South.

"And not only is this matter of the Ku-Klux to be considered in the Democrats' own clogging of their steps, but also the other mistakes they are continually making in the South. Everywhere they go they blunder."

The efforts of this country to bring about a settlement between Spain and the four republics of western South America, with which the former power was some years in active warfare, are partially approved by an armistice to be signed at Washington. It is some time since the Spanish fleet was repulsed in its assaults and then recalled by the stress of civil war. But the hostilities thus suspended have never been formally reconciled, and the steps to be taken now inaugurate a measure of much importance to the prosperity of the republics.

This cotton crop now arriving at the cotton ports of the South promises to be the largest since the famous one of 1859-'60. The Savannah Republican, basing its estimate on the number of bales already received, says that the crop will reach 3,750,000 to 4,000,000 bales. By reason of its increased railroad connections, Savannah is fast taking position as one of the principal cotton ports of the South. This large crop establishes the facts that the freedman is willing to work, and that the land, being divided among a large number, is more carefully cultivated.

The results of the local and municipal elections in all parts of the country still continue unfavorable to the Democrats.—In Albany county, New York, the Republicans have made gains. They have carried Jersey City, which was decidedly Democratic last year. They have elected their mayor in Paterson. They have gained supervisors in several counties in New Jersey, and, for the first time in many years, have a majority in Somerset county. In the Western States, excepting Missouri, where the Republicans are divided, the reports of Republican gains are also general.

The political canvass in the District of Columbia is of the most spirited character. We entertain no doubt as to the result.—The Democratic party there, with the stupidity that characterizes all its movements, headed its ticket with R. T. Merrick, known at Chicago, where he resided, as one of the fiercest and most blatant Copperheads. While Northern men feel kindly toward the great body of the Southern army, they cannot forgive such traitors as Merrick, who invoked a struggle in which they were too mean and cowardly to take part.

The work of the Joint High Commission is said to be progressing satisfactorily, and will be completed by the first of May. The statement as to the details of their agreement points, not to the settlement of the Alabama claims, but to a basis of settlement, leaving the details to be adjusted on this basis hereafter. This, of course, involves the speedy settlement of the difficulty on the proposed basis. The fishery question is understood to be fully disposed of—our Government to pay Canada a fixed sum for the concession of full fishing privileges to American seamen.

The Albany Law Journal tells this story: "A witness was examined before a judge, in a case, who required him to repeat the precise words spoken. The witness hesitated until he riveted the attention of the entire court upon him; then, fixing his eyes earnestly upon the judge, began: 'May it please your honor, you lie, you steal, and you get your living by stealing.' The face of the judge reddened, and he immediately said: 'Turn to the jury, sir.'"

Mrs. Kneass, of Cleveland, had more bed-bugs than she had room for, so she soaked the bedstead in benzine. One of the bed-bugs struck something hard and struck fire, igniting the benzine, burning the house, and killing every bug on the premises. She says she can recommend benzine for moving buildings.

SAVED FROM THE GALLOWS.

A CONDUCTOR'S STORY.

You see, when I was on the old W. & V. line in Missouri, I ran what was known as the Drovers' Express, going West, but which had the name, I suppose, in contradiction to that title, of the Gentleman's Wagon, coming East. The drovers, when coming to market with their cattle, always went with the beasts on the freight train, but going home and Westward they went with me.

One night I had an unusually rough crowd aboard. They were generally rough enough, but this time they were worse than usual. I had their car for I kept them to themselves placed in the rear of the train; and to prevent their trespassing on the other cars of the train or stepping off the platform, I had them locked in.

We started about 9 o'clock in the night, and as I went through the drovers' car for my tickets I found mischief brewing already. Each man had provided himself with a bottle or two of whiskey, and the car had begun in earnest, but few if any of the drovers being sober.

One or two small fights had been begun, one in particular between a tall Kentuckian and a short, thick-set Missourian, having threatened to lead to serious consequences, both men having drawn their knives. Their friends had, however, separated them, and had placed them in different parts of the car, the Kentuckian sitting in the front seat near the door, and the Missourian far back in the rear. The latter, when they were being parted, had vowed that he would yet kill the former, but as both were in hot blood the words were not much thought of; though they helped to sentence him to be hung afterward.

As I took up the Missourian's ticket he repeated to me his threats against his opponent's life, and proposed a duel in the baggage-car with two knives. I managed, however, to silence the half-maddened man, and a friend sitting in the same seat with him, and nearest the aisle of the car, promised to see that he should not leave his seat and attack the Kentuckian.

There being no more stops to make, I curled myself up in a chair in the baggage car for a nap, and dozed comfortably till awakened by the rattling of the bell-rope overhead, and the whistle of the engine calling for breaks to be put down. Catching up my lantern I opened the car door and looked out, but found nothing but darkness and most ominous. This train having stopped I got off and ran to the engine, asking the engineer in a half-sleep manner where we were and why we had stopped? "We're in the Grover Tunnel," he replied, "and I stopped because the bell-rope was pulled."

The Grover tunnel was about a mile in length, through which we passed nearly all the way at half-speed, and with the steam shut off from the cylinders, there being a down grade at the entrance, which was sufficient to nearly give us headway to carry us through. When the engineer saw the light at the further end of the tunnel, however, he was accustomed to put on stop, and it was just at the time, he told me, that the bell was pulled, being the signal for him to stop.

By this time my brakeman had been around the outside of the train, and finding all the couplings right, and not discovering anything wrong externally, I gave the signal to go ahead, as it was dangerous to stay in the tunnel. As we came out the daylight was just breaking, and with a brakeman, I started through the train to find out, if possible, who pulled the bell-rope.

Most of the passengers were asleep in the forward cars as we passed through, but some few were awake, who told me that the pulling of the bell came from behind, from some of the rear cars. I made the trip through the entire train, with the exception of the drovers' car, and yet the account said the bell was pulled from still further in the rear. It was daylight as the brakeman and myself crossed on to the platform of the last car. After unlocking the door, we essayed to push it open, but some weight against it prevented us. With our united strength, however, we pushed it open, and found the cause of the obstruction.

Against the bottom of the door lay the Kentuckian, his body twisted and rolled up into a distorted heap, as if he had been overtaken by a fit. Supposing him to be in a drunken stupor, I raised him to his seat, and then began to loosen his collar and neck-tie. As I did so I noticed a small livid blue line running exactly around his throat, and cutting deeply into the flesh; his face also was of a deadly hue, and frightened at it, I knew what I saw, I sent the brakeman for a physician whom I knew was on the train. As soon as he came and had handled the Kentuckian, he exclaimed—"The man's dead, and neck is broken—the man has been murdered!"

Immediately I remembered the fight of the preceding evening between the now dead man and the Missourian, and telling the doctor of my fear that the latter had kept his word and murdered the Kentuckian, we agreed to make some movement toward the detection of the murderer. Going to the rear we found the Missourian curled up on his seat, his friend also being on the outside seat, and both being apparently asleep.

As we looked upon the Missourian, we heard him mutter, "I'll kill him, I'll kill him," as if half asleep and awake. We were turning away when the doctor's quick eye caught a glimpse of something the man held in his hand, and reaching over gently drew it from his fingers, exclaiming, "and this was what the deed was done with," holding up to me a thin leather string, about the size of a small white lash, and used by drovers as a belt around their waist, and also to hobble an unruly ox, or to tie the legs of a calf.

As we left the drunken man, the doctor said: "That brute has crept up behind the Kentuckian, when in the darkness of the tunnel, and throwing this strap around his throat, has jerked his head back and broken his neck at once. The body will then fall forward against the door, and the murderer was groping his way back to his seat, and has accidentally caught the bell-rope in his drunken grasp and pulled it."

To make a long story short, the Missourian was arrested on a charge of murder, tried and convicted, the circumstantial evidence being very strong. I went to visit him several times in his condemned cell, and somehow or another the declarations of innocence the fellow made to me shook my belief in his guilt, although I had witnessed strongly against him at his trial, and as last I found myself fully confirmed in my new belief of his entire innocence. I could see no way to save him, however, and five weeks of his time on earth had rolled by, and yet the mystery was as great a one as ever.

One morning about that time I was running the same train, only, as it happened, we had no particular drovers' car.

THE "PAIN KILLER."

SPECIAL NOTICES.

THE "PAIN KILLER" is by universal consent allowed to have won for itself a reputation unsurpassed in the history of medical preparations. Its instantaneous effect in the eradication and extinction of Pain in all its various forms incident to the human family, and the unqualified written and verbal testimony of the masses in its favor, have been, and are its own best advertisements.

The ingredients of the PAIN KILLER, being purely VEGETABLE, render it a perfectly safe and efficacious remedy taken internally, as well as for external applications, when used according to directions. The stain upon linen from its use is readily removed by washing with alcohol.

This Medicine, justly celebrated for the cure of so many of the afflictions incident to the human family, has now been before the public over THIRTY years, and has found its way into almost every corner of the world; and wherever it has been used, the same opinion is expressed of its medical properties.

In any attack, where prompt action upon the system is required, the Pain Killer is invaluable. Its almost instantaneous effect in Relieving Pain is truly wonderful; and when used according to directions, is true to its name, a PAIN KILLER.
