"I say unto you all—Watch!"

Watch, for the time is short: Watch, for the prize is nigh; Watch, lest temptations overcome; Watch, Christian, watch and pray!

Watch, for the fish is strong; Watch, lest the bridegroom knock in vain; Watch, though he tarry long! Chase slumber from thine eyes; Chase doubting from thy breast; With thousands go no more before; Of heaven's eternal rest, Watch, Christian, watch and pray!

Take Jesus for thy trust; Watch, watch for evermore; With thousands go no more before; Now, when thy sun is up— Now, while 'tis called to-day— O now, when thou art free, Watch, Christian, watch and pray.

Moral and Religious. The Two Homes. One thing which constitutes intemperance such a pre-eminence, is its desolating power over the family. It is the great and sublime office of the family constitution to nurture all the generous charities, all the gentle emotions and lofty purposes of the human mind, as capable. And when all is moving forward harmoniously in the family circle there is an educating process ever in progress. The calm manliness of the father, the tender love of the mother, the affectionate kindness of brothers and sisters, all send forth an influence which operates upon the hearts of all like the dew and sunshine and the sun when it springs upon the waking garden. But let that father become intemperate and desolation follows. The calm manliness that sat upon his brow is gone—the mother's eye fills with tears of sorrow—and loving children start with amazement. The Eden of home is changed into a gloomy wild.—"Churchyard News."

WALTER SCOTT'S ADVICE TO HIS SON.—Read, my dear Charlie, read; and that which is useful. Man differs from birds and beasts only because he has the means of availing himself of the knowledge acquired by his predecessors. The swallow builds the same nest which its father and mother built, and the sparrow does not improve by the experience of its parents. The son of the learned pig, if it had one, would be a mere brute, only to make bacon of. It is not so with the human race. Our ancestors lodged in caves and wigwags, where we construct places for the rich, and comfortable dwellings for the poor, and why is this but because our eyes are enabled to see the better way, to improve upon our ancestor's improvements, and to avoid their errors? This can only be done by studying history, and comparing it with passing events.

A KIND WORD FOR "MOTHER."—Despise not thy mother when she is old. Age may waste a mother's beauty, strength, limbs, senses, and estate; but her relation as mother is as the sun when it declines in the west, and she is always bright. How little do we appreciate a mother's tenderness while living! How heedless we are of all her anxieties and kindness! But when she is dead and gone, when the cares and coldness of the world come withering to our hearts, when we experience how hard it is to find sympathy—how few will befriend us in misfortune—then it is that we think of the mother we have lost.

FORGIVENESS.—My heart was heavy, for its trust had been abused, its kindness answered with a foul wrong. So turning gloomily from my fellow men, one Sunday I strolled among the green meadows, and in a rural place there I pondered, where all human love and hate find one sad level. I thought how, sooner or later, wronged and wrong doer, each with meek face and cold hands folded over a still heart, should pass the great divide of the grave, and there—whether our footsteps tread whence none depart. Awe for myself, and pitying my race, our common sorrow, like a mighty wave, swept all my pride away; and, trembling, I forgave.

IF there is any foundation of virtue in the heart of man, the more he has been thrown with the less respectable part of the other sex, the more he has been exposed to their attentions, the more he will be able to prize and treasure when he meets with it, and the more strict is his lines of demarcation between the modest and those in whose conduct there may be any touch of levity. It might almost be taken as a maxim, that the more a man has been exposed to the attentions of the other sex, the more he will be able to prize and treasure when he meets with it, and the more strict is his lines of demarcation between the modest and those in whose conduct there may be any touch of levity.
