

Staunton Spectator.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, 1887.

"Dirty-rags" Foraker, Governor of Ohio.

"DIRTY-RAGS" AND "EMBLEMS OF TREASON."

Those of our readers who heard Governor Foraker, of Ohio, deliver two, only speeches in this city a few years ago, will probably be surprised that he now calls himself "dirty-rags" and "emblems of treason."

What they did, and what they should have done.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

TEMPEST IN A TEA-POT.

"Much Ado About Nothing."

LEADING REPUBLICANS AFFECT MOOR INDIGNATION.

THE SOUTH "CALM AND SERENE"

As during the past week the leading Republicans of the North have been giving expressions of indignation, and have attempted to lash popular sentiment in that section into a fury, and have been out-bellowing the bulls of Bashan, and frothing at the mouth like mad dogs, that our readers may know the cause, or rather the want of cause, of all this, we publish the documents in reference to the order to restore to the different States, North as well as South, the flags belonging to their commands, that had been captured during the war.

"War Department—Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, April 30, 1887.—Hon. Wm. C. Cress, U. S. Senator, Ohio, Cincinnati, Ohio. Sir:—The flags captured from the Union Army during the war have been placed in this office (stored in one of the attic rooms of the building) a number of Union flags captured from the rebels, and forwarded to the War Department for safe keeping, together with a number of Confederate flags, the capture of which was a disgrace to the hands during the late civil war.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

RAPHINE—Its Industries.

The annexed letter of Mr. Jas. E. A. Gibbs, which appeared in the Baltimore Manufacturers' Record, of the 18th instant, furnishes a volume of valuable information.

It is not only suggestive to other sections of our Valley country which have recently been brought into notice by the completion of two sets of railroad through the extent of Augusta and Rockbridge counties, but furnishes positive proof of the early return of good interest upon investments made for the purpose of developing the resources which we have here awaiting the touch of enterprise and sagacity.

Mr. Frank Trigg commits suicide. At 4 o'clock last Sunday afternoon Mr. Frank Trigg committed suicide by jumping into Niagara Falls from the third bridge that connects the Three Sister Islands. He went over the horse-shoe Falls. He lived in Washington, and was the ticket agent of the Newport News & Miss. Valley Railroad Company. He was about 40 years old and leaves a wife and two children aged 9 and 14 years respectively.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

THE SUMMER SOLAR—This great event in the sun's apparent course occurred yesterday, the 21st inst., at 1 o'clock in the afternoon.

He then enters the sign Gemini, and the astronomical summer begins. The great luminary reaches his extreme point of northern declination, just grazing the tropic of Cancer. After standing still for a few days before and after the solstice he will advance his steps towards the equator, shortening as he goes the length of the summer days, lessening his meridian altitude and contracting the broad circle that marks his path in the heavens.

Mr. Frank Trigg commits suicide. At 4 o'clock last Sunday afternoon Mr. Frank Trigg committed suicide by jumping into Niagara Falls from the third bridge that connects the Three Sister Islands. He went over the horse-shoe Falls. He lived in Washington, and was the ticket agent of the Newport News & Miss. Valley Railroad Company. He was about 40 years old and leaves a wife and two children aged 9 and 14 years respectively.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

From the Rich. Dispatch, June 19th. FITZON TAKES THE FLAGS.

THE GOVERNOR MAKES COMMENT ON FORAKER'S FIERCENESS—TRIGG POSITION OF THE SOUTH—PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S UNWARRANTED ORDER—WAS IT A MISTAKE?

GOVERNOR LEE WAS asked last night by a member of the dispatches from some of the Northern Governors in reference to the return of the battle-flags. He said "Yes, and I was amazed at the demagogic display after the war had been over some twenty-two years. He did not regret the flags were not returned, but he was sorry now that the President yielded to the better impulses of his nature and assented to the suggestion of others, because it afforded an opportunity for mischief to be done in favor of a sectional party by abuse of a class of their fellow-citizens who were as conscientious in their belief of their construction of the Constitution and as brave in war as those who differed with them."

Mr. Frank Trigg commits suicide. At 4 o'clock last Sunday afternoon Mr. Frank Trigg committed suicide by jumping into Niagara Falls from the third bridge that connects the Three Sister Islands. He went over the horse-shoe Falls. He lived in Washington, and was the ticket agent of the Newport News & Miss. Valley Railroad Company. He was about 40 years old and leaves a wife and two children aged 9 and 14 years respectively.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

RESOLUTIONS upon the Death of Gen. R. D. LILLY.

The Board of Trustees of Washington and Lee University have adopted the following resolutions of respect to the memory of the late Gen. R. D. Lilly, financial agent of the University, who died at the residence of his family in Richmond, Va., on the 19th inst. "The death of Gen. R. D. Lilly, the financial agent of this University having occurred since the last meeting of this Board, the following minute is adopted:—

GOVERNOR LEE WAS asked last night by a member of the dispatches from some of the Northern Governors in reference to the return of the battle-flags. He said "Yes, and I was amazed at the demagogic display after the war had been over some twenty-two years. He did not regret the flags were not returned, but he was sorry now that the President yielded to the better impulses of his nature and assented to the suggestion of others, because it afforded an opportunity for mischief to be done in favor of a sectional party by abuse of a class of their fellow-citizens who were as conscientious in their belief of their construction of the Constitution and as brave in war as those who differed with them."

Mr. Frank Trigg commits suicide. At 4 o'clock last Sunday afternoon Mr. Frank Trigg committed suicide by jumping into Niagara Falls from the third bridge that connects the Three Sister Islands. He went over the horse-shoe Falls. He lived in Washington, and was the ticket agent of the Newport News & Miss. Valley Railroad Company. He was about 40 years old and leaves a wife and two children aged 9 and 14 years respectively.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

When it became known that an order had been issued for the return to the several States of the flags which had been captured from their troops during the war, the Republicans entered a most intemperate and indignant protest, vowing that it should not be done, and hearing cheers, both loud and deep, upon those who had conceived, and those who had prepared, and those who had issued the order, and at once about exciting the most embittered sectional prejudices, and stirring into flame the dying embers of the fiercest civil strife.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THRESHING MACHINES. Simplest, Most Durable, Economical, and Perfect in every respect. No Grain; Cleans it Ready for Market.

RENEES CATT & BRO. Will move into the room No. 20, Augusta Street, lately occupied by J. P. Schuchman, and will be ready to receive business on the 1st inst.

TO OLIVER'S BOOK STORE and get one of those grand... MEXICAN HAMMOCKS, CROQUET SETS and HAMMOCKS at low prices.

STRAW HAT. A beautiful... BAKER BROS. We have just received a large lot of BISSELL CHILLED PLOWS.

W. L. OLIVER. The following is the list of names of the contractors who have been selected for the construction of the new bridge over the Rappahannock River.

W. L. OLIVER. The following is the list of names of the contractors who have been selected for the construction of the new bridge over the Rappahannock River.

W. L. OLIVER. The following is the list of names of the contractors who have been selected for the construction of the new bridge over the Rappahannock River.

W. L. OLIVER. The following is the list of names of the contractors who have been selected for the construction of the new bridge over the Rappahannock River.

W. L. OLIVER. The following is the list of names of the contractors who have been selected for the construction of the new bridge over the Rappahannock River.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THRESHING MACHINES. Simplest, Most Durable, Economical, and Perfect in every respect. No Grain; Cleans it Ready for Market.

RENEES CATT & BRO. Will move into the room No. 20, Augusta Street, lately occupied by J. P. Schuchman, and will be ready to receive business on the 1st inst.

TO OLIVER'S BOOK STORE and get one of those grand... MEXICAN HAMMOCKS, CROQUET SETS and HAMMOCKS at low prices.

STRAW HAT. A beautiful... BAKER BROS. We have just received a large lot of BISSELL CHILLED PLOWS.

W. L. OLIVER. The following is the list of names of the contractors who have been selected for the construction of the new bridge over the Rappahannock River.

W. L. OLIVER. The following is the list of names of the contractors who have been selected for the construction of the new bridge over the Rappahannock River.

W. L. OLIVER. The following is the list of names of the contractors who have been selected for the construction of the new bridge over the Rappahannock River.

W. L. OLIVER. The following is the list of names of the contractors who have been selected for the construction of the new bridge over the Rappahannock River.

W. L. OLIVER. The following is the list of names of the contractors who have been selected for the construction of the new bridge over the Rappahannock River.