The Black Diamond Quartette.

The entertainment given in the Opera-House last Thursday night for the benefit of the Y. M. C. A. by the Black Diamond Quartette of North Carolina, was unique and highly enjoyed by the audience. The singing was very fine, particularly that of M. S. Simmons and Henry Tate, the bass and soprano voices respectively. All the parts were well executed, but we think those most enjoyed were "Killingdove" by M. S. Simmons and the "Song that reached my heart" by Henry Tate, impersonating a female singer, both in dress and voice.

Next to the last piece on the programme was "The Last of the Mohicans" from him on a coincidence that what they were singing is, the alarm of fire was sounded, and the audience, many of whom thought the Opera-House was on fire, fled in confusion. The quartette, however, went on as usual, and the fire was extinguished by the fire department.

The fire was caused by a gas lamp in the Opera-House, which was extinguished by the fire department. The fire was caused by a gas lamp in the Opera-House, which was extinguished by the fire department.

Deaths.

Mrs. Virginia E. Waddell, wife of Horace Waddell, died at her residence in this city Sunday morning the 30th ultimo at 10 o'clock. She was seriously indisposed but a few days before her death.

It is thought that there is a lady more widely known and universally esteemed in this city than the deceased. From very early years she had been a zealous member of the First Presbyterian church, and a truly earnest Christian. Her mind and her heart and her hands were devoted to Christian work, and in strengthening the church she joyed. She was born to a rich family in the Presbyterian church which she beautifully and with devotion carried through life. Her mother was a sister of the eminent Dr. Archibald Alexander, and her father, Henry McTear, a pious man, was an officer of the Virginia troops in the war of 1812, and a fine representative of the patriots of his day.

Her husband, whose loss by the death of his devoted wife cannot be estimated, has the sincere sympathy of all who know him, and esteems him highly for his merits as a man and his consistent "walk and conversation" as a pious Christian gentleman.

The brief remarks made at the funeral service strikingly portrayed the character and the noble worth of Mrs. Waddell, and the void which her death creates. In sympathy with the utterances of the minister were the feelings of the large assemblage of neighbors and friends who thus testified their love and respect for her.

Rev. Dr. Lattimer, of Union Theological Seminary, who is filling the pulpits of First Presbyterian church during the absence of Rev. Dr. McFarland, and the presence of Rev. Dr. McFarland, conducted the funeral service. The pall-bearers were Mr. W. M. Burke, A. T. Gilkison, Arista Hoge, J. N. McFarland, A. P. Kinney, J. A. Templeton, E. L. Edmundson and John M. R. Denny.

An Interesting Letter.

CHICAGO, Ill., June 29, 1889.—The finding of the special Grand Jury was returned into Court late last afternoon, the following being the list of indictments:

MARTIN BURKE, PATRICK CONEY, JOHN F. BEGGIS, JOHN H. COUGHLIN, PATRICK O'SULLIVAN, FRANK WOODRUFF, JOHN KUNZE.

Kunze is a new name, but the man is a most important capture. He is the one who drove Cronin from his office to the Carson cottage; is a friend of Coughlin's, who formerly spent a good deal of his time reading around the Chicago avenue station, and who then sold jobs at a Chicago avenue photograph gallery near the station.

Kunze is the man who was sent by Coughlin to Dinnan's heavy stable, on North Clark street, to take the horse side Turin Hall, just north of Chicago avenue. He drove at once to Dr. Cronin's office, got his horse and took him to the cottage where he hid his death.

It is a story to tell that fastens the guilt of active participation in the murder upon Cronin. It was the beginning of the case as soon as the Doctor got out of the vehicle Kunze turned the buggy around to drive away, and he did so looking toward the cottage, saw the door open and saw Coughlin in the entry; he also saw a blow struck by Coughlin, and received upon the head.
