THE DAILY DISPATCH.

BOB FLETCHER. I once knew a ploughman, Bob Fletcher his name Who was old and was ugly, and so was his dame Yet they lived quite contented, and free from all strife. Bob Fletcher the ploughman, and Judy his wife.

As the morn streaked the east, and the night fled away, They would rise up for labor, refreshed for the day; And the song of the lark, as it rose on the gale, Found Bob at the plough, and his wife at the pail.

They would rise up for labor, refreshed for the day; And the song of the lark, as it rose on the gale, Found Bob at the plough, and his wife at the pail. A neat little cottage, in front of a grove, Where in youth they first gave their young hearts up to love.

Was the solace of age, and to them doubly dear, As it called up the past, with a smile and a tear. Each tree had its thought, and the vow could impart.

That mingled in youth the warm wish of the heart, The thorn was still there, and the blossom at the bore, And the song from its top seemed the same as before.

When the curtain of night over Nature was spread, And Bob had returned from the plough to his shed, Like the dove on the nest, he reposed from all care, If his wife and his youngsters contented were there.

I have passed by his door when the evening was there, And the hill and the landscape were fading away, And have heard from the cottage, with grateful surprise, The voice of thanksgiving like incense arise.

And I thought on the proud, who would look down with scorn, On the little cottage, the grove and the thorn, And felt that the riches and titles of life Were dross, to contentment with Bob and his wife.

YANKEE INQUISITIVENESS.—A gentleman riding in an Eastern railroad car, which was carefully supplied with passengers, observed in the seat before him a lean shabbily Yankee, every feature of whose face seemed to ask a question; and a little circumstance soon proved that he possessed a most "inquiring mind." Before him occupying the "inquire seat," sat a lady dressed in deep black; and after shifting his position several times, and endeavoring to get an opportunity to look in her face, he at length "caught her eye." He nodded familiarly to her, and asked
