DISPATOR POR THE STAR

Beath of G. P. R. James, Eq. Phosenade of our Virginia readers, to whom James had become endeared, during his idence here as British Consul for Virginia; it read, with sorrowini hearts, the sad animoment, which the Europa brings us, of death. Rr. James was born in London out the beginning of the present contury—very early imbited literary tastes, and m time to time contributed to the journals reviews. At the age of fifteen, he went to inco, where he spent many years of his lifewas upon the advice of the inte Wassing-raying, that he first attempted anything portant in authorship. The result of Inco's encouragement was the novel of Economy. Since that time he has written a larger mber of novels than any writer of his day, some of which would have done credit to Sir Walten Scotta. About 1850, he removed with his family to the United States, and was afterwards appointed H. B. M. Consul for Virginia. His genial character, and cordial, unpretending manners, made him hosts of friends here. From Virginia he was transferred to the Consul-Generalship at Venice, where he was reciding at the time of his death.

The Great Eastern.

This vessel was to sail on the 16th inst., (last Saturday week.) Unless she is much slower than she has the credit of being, she should have been already in port. But no tidings of her seem to have been received. The fact is, her brief history presents such a catalogue of disappointments, failures and catastrophes, that people seem to have lost all confidence in her movements. There has, herstofors, been no better assurance that she was sor coming, than an announcement that she was. As a proof of the low ebb of public confidence, only twenty-five passengers had engaged berths up to the 13th of June. For our own part, we have no doubt she has been again deonly twenty-five passengers had engaged berths up to the i3th of June. For our own part, we have no doubt she has been again detained, and we advise all who feel any curiosity about her, to do as we are doing; that is, to expect her when they see her, and not one moment before. There must be shockingly bad management of her affairs in some quarter. •

Her agents in New York, meanwhile, seem to be determined not to be taken unawares.—They act upon the presumed probability that after all, she may come some of these days like a thief in the night, when she is least expected, and they stand continually on their guard. They have made arrangements to have her announced by telegraph from Sandy Hook as soon as she shall heave in sight, if that auspicious moment should ever arrive, which seems somewhat doubtful. In the intervent they hope and believe—as the Jews do about the rebuilding of the temple—that the event may come to pass, though they should never live to see it. Continued disappointments, nevertheless, sink the heart of man, and the constant postponement of hope renders it sick nevertheless, sink the heart of man, and the constant postponement of hope renders it sick unto death. We profess to be still hopeful, but incredulous, and should we ever see the great ship, we promise to believe. For who knows, after all, that she may not be some myth of a craft, some "Flying Dutchman" of our cousins' imaginations, invented to gull his kinemen on this side of the water, and turn them into a laughing stock? Archturn them into a laughing stock? Archbishop Whatelf proved, according to the most approved rules of logic as taught at the schools, that there never was any such man as NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, or such fight as Waterloo. He proved it by a process familiar to every obstinate unbeliever, being the very same that led the late lamented James Head Lynon to the conclusion that there was no such country as Oregon. He had never seen BONAPARTE, and had never seen anybody that had, so far as he could ascertain with certainty. To be sure, he had seen many people who said they had seen him; but—new difficulties springing up at every step—how could he know that they told the truth? Now, who has seen the Great Eastern? If there be any man who says he has seen her, If there be any man who says he has seen her, as you say you saw it, I believeit; but if I en it myself, I should no have believed it." Now, "our sentiments," with regard to verse of all this. We are determined to be-lieve that there is such a vessel when we see continue to be as incredulous as the Irish clergyman, (we forget his name,) who persists in maintaining that the sun travels around the earth, every twenty-four hours, and upon its axis, because he caunot feel it, or that any body ever circumnavigated the globe, be-cause he was not of the party.

We have been writing about these doubtful matters, until we have become almost as great a skeptic as Bichop Brankstay. "Since you come to that," said the Indian to the Missionary, "I don't believe that "fish story" either."
We feel ourselves doubting whether there are We feel ourselves doubting whether there are really any such people as the Japanese. We do not yet, however, go quite as far as the Bishop in question. He distrusted the evidence of his own senses. He said, "there was no matter," and we have Brace's authority for saying he proved it, too. How he contrived to accomplish that stapendous feat of ratiocination, we are unable to say, for we are not consister with his writings. But we know a man can prove anything, when he sets reso-lutely to work to do it. It is sufficient to say that we confide in the very is telligence which the Bishop must have rejected. We trust to our eyes, and when we shall have seen the Mesers. Denny & Jackson, of New York, have in course of publication a work, to be called "Women of the Santh." It is to contain the names of all Southern women distinguished in literature—Mrs. Le Vent, Afr. Errouin, Miss Tahley, Manual Harland and others, with biographical statches, steel portraits, and choice selections from their writings. Such a work should be acceptable and largely paironized by the South, especially since the publication of Dana's "Household Book of Poetry."

We but repeat the publicity expressed opinion of some of our but judges and critics, in asserting of Miss Tahley (what Epsan A. Pon, upon reading her deep productions, predicted of her.) that the rails undealetty above all our American formic poots. The Rev. Mr. Rowards, in a heantiful tribute to Miss Tahley, "Me is not to be lettered by

"The Melician Melician Meda."

We congratulate the community that the Council has so amended the law forbidding the tooting of the here in the circuta, as a permit the vendous of that sparkling likery to announce their arrival at the doors and gains of enstemers, and thus save a good deal of the nast convenience to themselves and their customers. We should have been glad if they had repealed the prohibition altograher. In this day of horns, it is wonderful that our venerable city fathers should ever have winged war upon a harmless instrument, the nound whereof is calculated to renew their youth, and bring back the days when the stage horn was heard echoing over the hills and dales, and the village goasips gathered in the front porches and at the hotel to witness the arrival of the prancing four in hand. We all love to grow young again, to go back in visions to the babbling brooks and green fields, and the cound of a norm calls up all these encociations and takes us once more to the calm and quiet period of our own and the world's history.—

If the Council expected to stop all noises in If the Council expected to stop all noises in the street, it would better not have any streets at all, or adopt such a policy as would make the grass grow in them.— Tuey ought to have all the carriage wheels well greased, forbid all conversation in a loud tone, the laughing andibly of all persons fa-cetiously inclined, the bellowing of cows and the barking of dogs. The horn is the least annoying of all street noises, and, associated with the idea of ice, is agreeable and refreshwith the idea of ice, is agreeable and refreshing. If there are some whom it annoys, the same objection would forbid the blowing of all horns, and then what would become of all the patriots and politicians who blow their own or each other's horns, in the newspapers and on the hustings, and thereby give offence to all who look upon modesty as a commendable quality? In fact, there is nothing going on in the political, commercial and literary world but the blowing of horns, each man blowing his own, unless the office can be better performed by another, and all this without regard to the quiet and repose of people who are more disturbed and irritated by this increasant self-trumpeting than anybody possibly can be by an innocent ice horn. by can be by an innocent ice horn.

On one occasion, Lonenzo Dow, who was about to address an out-door congregation on the subject of the last judgment, placed a lit-the subject of the last judgment, placed a lit-tle negro boy in a tree with a horn in his hand, and instructed him, at a signal which he should give, to blow with all his might.— The rural audience assembled; the eccentric preacher waxed warm with his subject, and preacher waxed warm with his subject, and picturing to his hearers the fearful scenes when the dead should be called to judgment, he suddenly exclaimed, "Sound thy trumpet, archangel," whereupon the concealed musician gave an appalling flourish of his instrument, which scared the congregation half out of their wits. Even when they discovered the cause of the uproar, it was difficult for them to compose their nerves, which seem to be a seem to cause of the uproar, it was difficult for them to compose their nerves, which seem to have been as easily affected by horns of this kind as some of our own delicate organizations.—

LORENZO, in no wise disconcerted by the discovery of his black angel in the tree, addressed his hearers in words which are not unworthy the attention of those who are put in such tribulation by the music of the ice carts: "If a little nigger with a tin horn frighten you on what will you do when Garrier sounds. so, what will you do when GABRIEL sounds

Lord Palmersten on the Sicilian Revolution, &c.

The reply of Lord Palmerston, in the House of Commons, on the 12th of June, to certain questions propounded by Mr. H. B. Sheridan, appears to be decisive of the fate of Sicily. Mr. S. asked Lord Palmerston the there is well as the intention of the Commons. whether it was the intention of the Govern-ment to increase the naval force in the bay of Naples and around Sicily to such an extent as to afford adequate protection to British sub-jects; whether it was their intention to com-municate to the Court of Naples their abhor-rence of the bombardment of Palermo; whether such communication was to be accompanied by a recommendation to conduct the war hereafter on civilized principles, and whether it was their intention to protest against, and, if necessary, avert any attempt by foreign powers to interfere in behalf of the King of Naples? Lord Palmerston said, 1st, that a sufficient number of ships had already been sent; 2d, that a diplomatic agent from the how are we to know that he is not playing London and Paris to make communications upon our credulity? Some wit, when a to the two Governments, and that, doubtless, he regarded as a disgrace to the present age 3d. Austria had pe-remptorily refused, France had given an an-swer similar to that of Austria, and, he conceived, it was not necessary to say what the feeling of the British government had been, and would be, in a case of the kind. He then sald in substance, that governments like that FRANCIS II. cannot fail to hear it, though he were deafer than the "deaf adder" has not long since known it, that his sceptre is about to pass from him forever. He can look for no help from abroal—he must depend entirely upon himself and his own resources. We do not believe that the rumored mediation of Napolkon, on the condition that Sicily be separated from Naples, and governed by a younger branch of the Nespolitan Bourbons, will be accepted by the latter, or that if it be, the Sicilians will give their consent. They have fought bravely for annexation to Piedment, and will be contented with no other arrangement that can be made. angement that can be made.
